A FAMILY'S

SYMBOL Imperial State Crown yesterday

BY RUSSELL MYERS Royal Editor

AFTER a long, sorrowful march behind the coffin of their beloved mother and grandmother, the Queen's family finally handed her over to her nation to pay homage at the lying in state.

Thousands of people had lined the route of the cortege from Buckingham Palace to Westminster Hall in the bright autumn sunshine.

At 2.22pm, draped with a Royal Standard and adorned with the Imperial State Crown, the coffin was placed on a gun carriage of The King's Troop Royal Horse Artillery to begin its solemn journey.

The King, flanked by his siblings, Princess Anne, Prince Andrew and the Earl of Wessex, walked behind his mother's coffin, followed by her grandsons, Peter Phillips, the Duke of Sussex and Prince of Wales.

Behind them were the late monarch's son-in-law Vice Admiral Sir Tim Laurence, the Duke of Gloucester, the Queen's cousin, and her nephew the Earl of Snowdon.

The Queen departed Buckingham Palace, the official residence where she had spent so much of her working life, to impassioned cries from the crowds of "We love you" and "God Bless the Queen".

As the procession marched, slowly and in perfect time to a deafening drum beat, through the streets of the capital, guns were fired at Hyde Park, and Big Ben tolled its bell at 60-second intervals.

For William and Harry it was a painful reminder of 25 years ago when, as children, they had followed their mother Princess Diana's coffin. But it was also a symbolic show of unity after their recent rift. As the procession reached the Cenotaph, Harry bowed his head as others in the procession saluted and the Duke of York, who had to give up his military titles after stepping down as a working royal over a sex scandal, turned his eyes to the right.

When the procession reached Westminster Hall, a medieval building with origins dating back to 1097, the coffin was carried inside by Grenadier Guards and placed on a catafalque surrounded by candles.

had not been in the procession, including the Queen Consort, the Princess of Wales and Countess of Wessex, looked overcome by grief as the Queen's coffin was brought toward the North Door of the hall.

The Duchess of Sussex, wearing pearl earrings given to her by the Queen, clasped her husband Prince Harry's hand tightly on meeting him outside to join the procession.

There was a short service conducted by the Archbishop of Canterbury before the family filed out. Then, just after 5pm, the first members of the public were allowed into the hall, some in tears as they bowed their heads or curtsied in front of the late monarch's coffin.

There will be a constant stream of mourners, 24 hours a day, during the lying in state, which ends on the morning of the funeral on Monday.

It is thought the queue could stretch for up to 10 miles. Culture Secretary Michelle Donelan said some people might have to stand in line for as long as 30 hours.

Speaking to people in the queue, the Archbishop of York Stephen

Cottrell said: "We are honouring two great British traditions, loving the Queen and loving a queue."

Kenneth Taylor, 72, who had camped overnight, said he had a lump in his throat as he viewed the coffin. He added: "We've lost someone special. Her service to this country was unswerving."

Archbishop of Canterbury, Justin Welby, ahead of conducting the service, said: "The moment you see a coffin – particularly when you are one of the family – it really pierces to the heart. There will be so many people who know exactly what the family are feeling as human beings."

The King, who spoke to many Heads of State yesterday, including US President Joe Biden, will have a private day of reflection today.

The Prince and Princess of Wales will travel to Norfolk to view flowers left at Sandringham, while the Earl and Countess of Wessex will head to Manchester to view the civic book of condolence.

The Queen died a week ago today.

QUEEN ELIZABETH II: 1926-2022

Side by side in

William and Harry's sombre walk echoes mum Diana's funeral

BY EMILY RETTER Senior Feature Writer in Parliament Square

THE brothers had been here before - side by side, taut with pain, knowing its slightest betrayal on their faces would be scrutinised the world over.

Twenty-five years ago they walked, arms locked stiffly by their sides, behind their adored mother Diana.

One tall, his handsome blond head and inscrutable face dipped; one tiny, his suit sleeves just too long, his baby face looking lost.

Yesterday, Prince William and Prince Harry, then just 15 and 12, now married men with children of their own, retraced those steps along London's hushed Mall.

In the intervening years an ugly rift neither could have imagined a quarter of a century ago had split them. William, the new Prince of Wales was in uniform.

Harry, no longer a working royal, wore a morning suit.

William's head dipped again. Harry's red brows furrowed.

Both, no doubt, were experiencing the same surreal sensation as they did 25 years ago.

"It was like I was outside of my body and just walking along doing what was expected of me," a pained Harry admitted recently.

He has said it was the sound of horses' hooves he remembers most clearly from that haunting day in September 1997. Yesterday the steady pad of boots on tarmac was the dominant sound.

The quick-paced march of the cortege, 75 steps a minute, tapped its way from Buckingham Palace to Westminster Hall behind the gun carriage and oak coffin.

It was easy to get lost in that meditative beat and no doubt at times they did, accompanied by the drums and the trumpets, punctuated by the once-a-minute gong of Big Ben.

Both brothers have spoken about the trauma they suffered after Diana's death, and the anguish of that day, when the decision was taken for the young boys to join their father, grandfather and uncle in following her coffin.

Harry has said the pain lay dormant until adulthood, when he struggled to numb it with alcohol and drugs, to "feel less like I was feeling".

William, too, has hinted at the rawness of his grief then, and how hard it was to digest, under the glare of public scrutiny.

"There's nothing like it in the world," he said. "There really isn't."

"It's like an earthquake has just run through the house and through your life and everything.

Your mind is completely split. And it took me a while for it to actually sink in."

As he walked behind his mother, his blank expression suggested just that: a teenage boy yet to absorb his loss.

The family tried to get them to talk, he said, adding: "But being so small at that age, it was very difficult to communicate or understand your feelings. It's... it's very complicated."

No one could have imagined the tsunami of grief thousands of mourners would express for Princess Diana. It confused the boys.

"This was my mum - you never even met her," Harry has said.

Yesterday, the grieving for the Queen was less wildly exhibited.

But also, perhaps lightening the brothers' steps, this time there was applause and hails of God Save the King.

It was a day to say goodbye and thank you but also one to welcome a new dawn.

It's a dawn, we all hope, in which William and Harry continue to walk side by side.

Military salute raises divide

NO UNIFORM Harry and Andrew bow their heads instead

BY EMILY RETTER

IT was a powerfully moving moment, three of the late Queen's children and a grandchild saluting their monarch.

Unfortunately, it also highlighted the disparity between those still working dutifully to continue her legacy, and those who are not.

While Charles, Anne, Edward and William all raised their arms, Andrew and Harry could not - both barred from wearing military uniform, Andrew since he stepped down from duties and Harry because he sought a civilian life.

On a day of unity, the cracks were painfully obvious.

MARCH OF TIME

Sorrow again

Anguish that may reunite brothers

POLLY HUDSON
Mirror columnist

WILLIAM called it "a long lonely walk... one of the hardest things I've ever done". Harry later turned to therapy.

Even aged 12, William understood there was a balance "between me being Prince William and having to do my bit, versus the private William who just wanted to go into a room and cry, who'd lost his mother".

Harry recalled: "Both of us were in shock. My mother had just died and I had to walk a long way behind her coffin, surrounded by thousands of people watching me while millions more did on television."

And 25 years on, like being forced to play themselves in a Crimewatch reconstruction of their most painful public ordeal, again they stepped out on the same London streets, behind a beloved matriarch whose absence will be sorely felt for the rest of their days.

TRUCE

To many of us William and Harry are forever frozen in time in that horrific, iconic image. Two broken boys behind their mother's coffin. Thank goodness they had each other, back then.

It's hard not to wonder if yesterday's procession, and the unexpected truce, has reminded William and Harry how much they mean to each other.

Because this is the most relatable part of proceedings so far, isn't it? When one of our nearest and dearest dies, the world doesn't stand still, events aren't cancelled, everyone goes to work. There aren't processions, and palaces and pomp. But we all have families, and no family is perfect. There will always be differences, disagreements, dysfunction.

Then some life-changing crisis reunites you. Could last weekend's joint walkabout, and yesterday's march, be the first steps toward a reconciliation for William and Harry? Here's hoping.

Sisters in grief

Quiet dignity of the mourning wives of Windsor

BY RACHAEL BLETCHLY

THEY stood silently inside the great hall, eyes cast down in sorrow, each lost in personal memories of their monarch and much-loved matriarch.

They listened out for the clatter of hooves and the crunch of approaching footsteps, wondering how their husbands were coping on their harrowing march of sorrow.

For as the royal men – and Princess Anne – escorted Her Late Majesty's coffin to her lying in state at Westminster, the mourning wives of Windsor were waiting, as ever, in support.

The Queen Consort, the Princess of Wales, the Countess of Wessex and the Duchess of Sussex were a united picture of elegance and dignity as they stood in a line before the committal service began.

And the image of their black-clad figures was a poignant reminder of the Queen, her mother, grandmother and sister in mourning for King George VI some 70 years ago.

The Princess Royal, in her admiral's uniform, had joined the King, his younger brothers and sons, for the 40-minute walk from Buckingham Palace to Westminster.

But as the coffin was carried towards the catafalque, the royals broke ranks and then regrouped so that Camilla, Kate, Sophie and Meghan could stand beside their grieving husbands.

It was a reminder of the cherished place each one of them had in the Queen's heart.

And a signal that, after all the upset and division of "Megxit", the royals are still prepared to welcome the Duke and Duchess of Sussex as, in the Queen's words, "much-loved members of my family".

Of course it will take time and effort for Princes William and Harry to properly heal their rift.

But after their joint appearance to meet well-wishers at Windsor on Saturday a rapprochement between the "Fab Four" is now at least a possibility.

To the disappointment of many body language analysts there was little chance for interaction between Kate and Meghan at yesterday's short and formal ceremony.

But the sight of the two of them standing together again would have warmed the late Queen's heart.

As the gun carriage procession left the palace at 2.22pm, the four Windsor wives watched from a window before driving to Westminster by car.

Camilla and Kate were first to leave, travelling in a Rolls-Royce bearing the new King's standard. Sophie and Meghan followed closely behind in a state Bentley.

As the Rolls arrived at Westminster, one photographer captured a stunning image of Catherine looking down sadly.

With a black veil covering part of her face it bore echoes of the photo taken in April 2021 at the funeral of the Duke of Edinburgh.

Yesterday, Queen Consort Camilla led the way into Westminster Hall where other members of the Royal Family were already lined up waiting.

She looked elegant and composed in a trademark wide-brimmed hat and pearl choker necklace, and wore an unusual stick insect brooch.

Kate, the new Princess of Wales, stood beside her wearing the favourite pearl-drop earrings she THOUGHTS Meghan on way to the hall inherited from her predecessor in that role, her mother-in-law Diana.

But in tribute to the late Queen she also had on a stunning brooch that belonged to Her Majesty.

The piece features a trio of large pearls set in the centre of a pavé-decorated leaf, and had been loaned to her by the monarch in the past.

Kate wore it in 2017 at a Commonwealth war graves cemetery in Ypres, during commemorations marking the centenary of the Battle of Passchendaele.

The Queen had worn it on her 73rd birthday during an official tour to South Korea.

In her own touching tribute, Meghan was wearing a pair of pearl and diamond earrings that the Queen gave her ahead of a visit to the city of Chester in 2018.

It was the first engagement they carried out together after Meghan married into the Royal Family.

Sophie Wessex, who the Queen had come to see as a second daughter, wore a simple silver cross around her neck, a symbol of the shared faith they often discussed.

Grief was etched across her face as the Queen's coffin was carried inside by a red-clad bearer party from the Grenadier Guards.

And as it passed in front of them, all four women's eyes fell upon the Imperial State Crown that rested on a purple cushion, shimmering and shining as brightly as the woman whose anointed head it once graced.

They fell into step beside their husbands for the brief but moving service, standing ramrod straight in their high-heeled court shoes.

And afterwards, as they filed out of the hall together, they made deep, respectful curtsies.

The mourning wives of Windsor, united in grief at the loss of a quite magnificent monarch and matriarch.

THERE was complete silence among the thousands of mourners on the Mall except for the sound of a woman sobbing.

But then, as the horse drawn carriage carrying the coffin went by, a man cried out: "God save the Queen."

Another responded by shouting: "God save the King." Then as the procession passed out of sight, applause rippled from Horse Guards Parade and all the way down the Mall.

Matthew Danbury, 44, a merchandiser from Bewdley, Worcs, who was among those gathered in London, said: "It's been an extraordinary day and I cannot believe the huge crowds."

Some people took deckchairs to claim their place in the front row.

At the spot where a gunman shot at the Queen in 1981, a military veteran stood with his medals pinned to his chest. People watched with a lump in the throat as the Royal Family followed the coffin in rhythmic footsteps as the Queen left Buckingham Palace for the last time.

Angie Goodwill-Leatt, 62, a gardener, travelled more than 200 miles from her home in York.

She said: "The Queen has been the only

QUEEN ELIZABETH II: 1926

SO HARD

BY RUSSELL MYERS
Royal Editor, at Westminster Hall

AS King Charles gazed at the exquisite angel carvings of Westminster Hall, where the Queen now rests, a sharp intake of breath exposed the grief of a son mourning his mother.

After steadying himself all week to honour the Queen and assume the responsibilities of a new monarch, his steely resolve appeared to crack for a moment.

On the day the Royal Family handed Her Majesty over to the nation, the pain etched on the faces of her loved ones told the tale of what has been lost.

It was my privilege to be one of around 300 people, including all the senior royals, to witness our late Queen brought to her lying-in-state at the majestic hall.

A red-eyed, haunted look seemed to be contagious among the Queen's grandchildren.

Steely looks of anguish filled the faces of the more senior royal women as they filed into the hall.

The Princess of Wales and Countess of Wessex seemed to take turns offering words of resolve before the rumbling of drums grew louder and bells tolled.

Outside, thousands steadied themselves to witness the Queen on a gun carriage departing Buckingham Palace for the final time.

A soldier's cry signified the moment was upon us.

The prevailing mood was sombre, with an overwhelming silence as people in dark clothing, heads bowed and faces solemn, looked on as an era ended.

The Queen Consort nervously flicked through her order of service to steady her nerves before the cortege emerged under a piercing beam of light from the Queen's Diamond Jubilee window.

Some of the Queen's closest family members appeared at the hall's North Door including her grandchildren Zara Tindall, Princess Eugenie and Princess Beatrice.

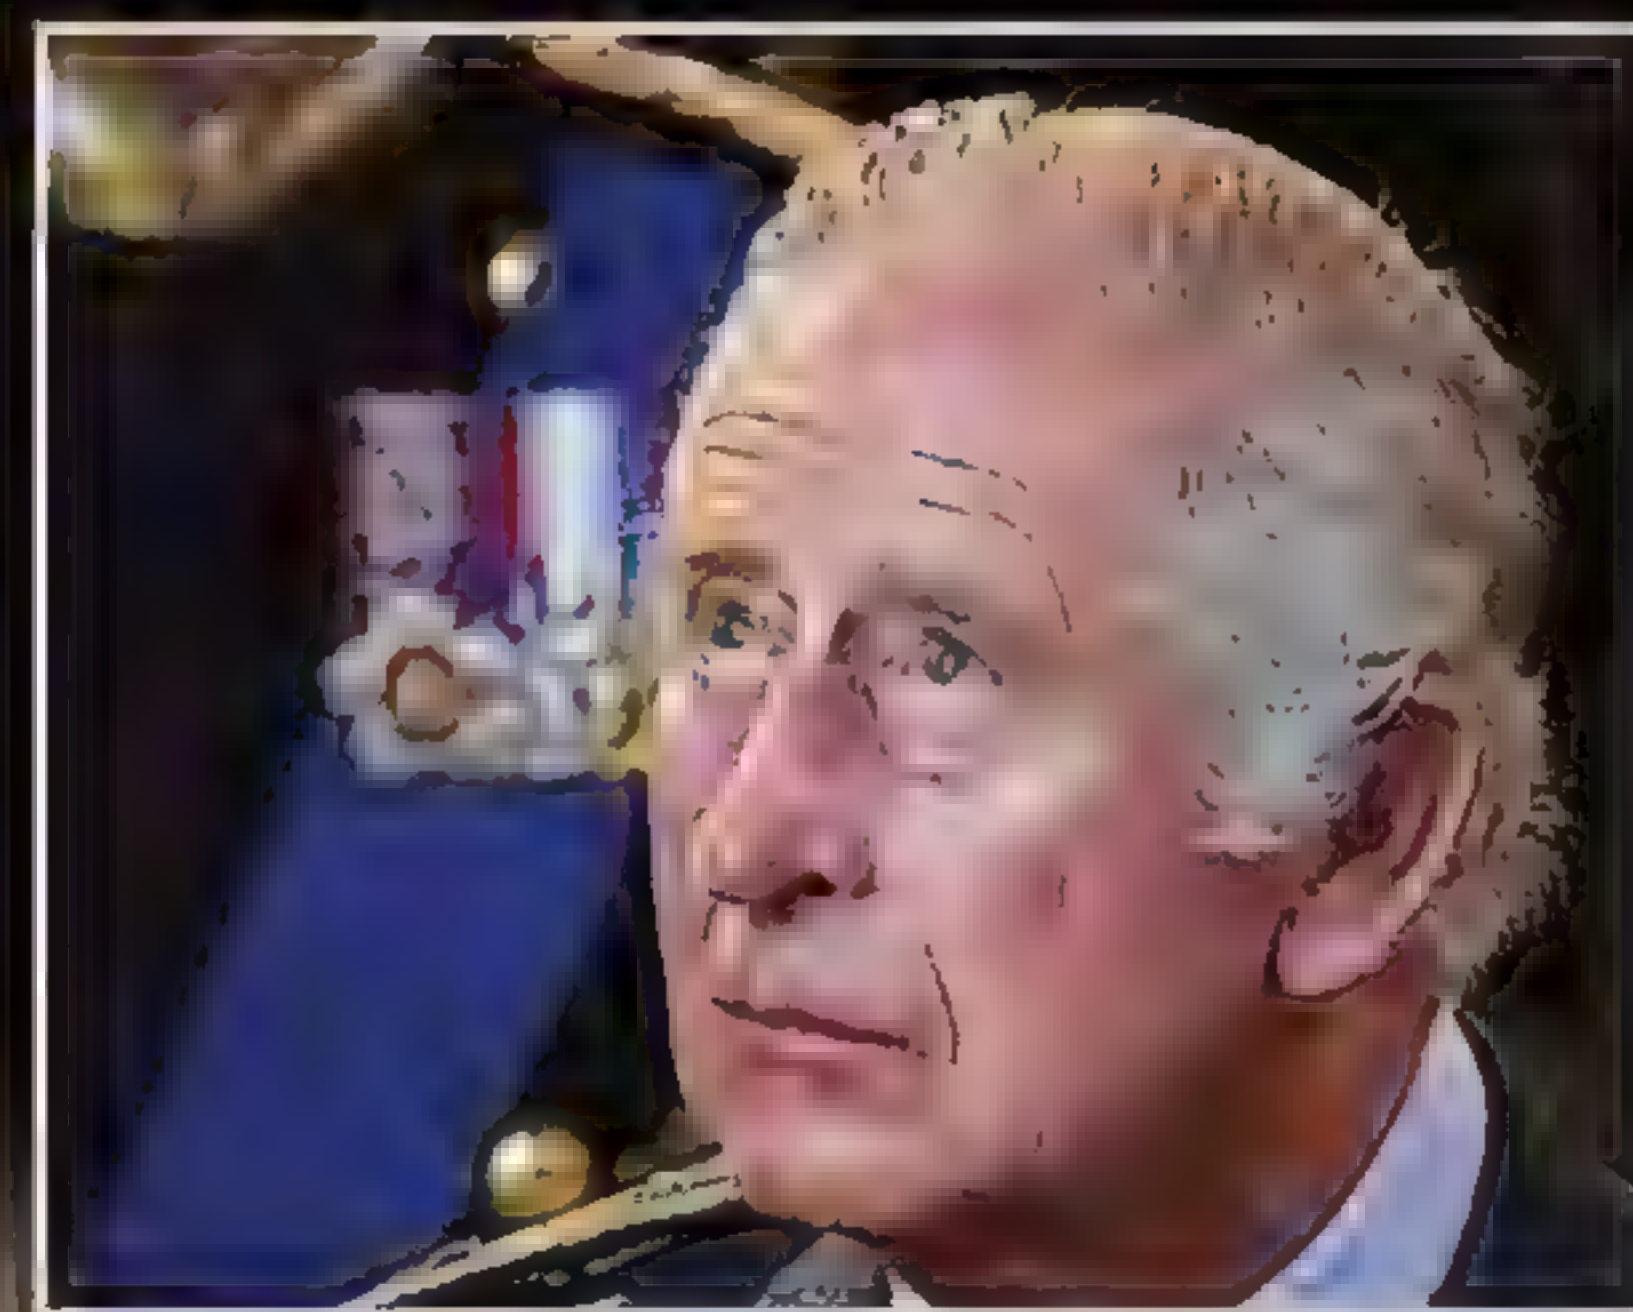

Soon after that, the Queen Consort, the Princess of Wales, the Countess of Wessex and Duchess of Sussex appeared together.

The four women stood, accompanied by their husbands, close to the door where the Queen's coffin would soon be arriving.

“The cortege emerged under a beam of light from her Jubilee Window

Then the coffin, draped in the Royal Standard and topped with the Imperial State Crown and flowers, was carried into the vast hall just after 3pm.

The procession was reflected in the glass of the entrance doors where one million mourners will enter over the next four days to say farewell. As Her Majesty's coffin passed by curtseying ladies-in-waiting, gasps broke the silence as Lady Gabriella Windsor's legs buckled with emotion.

The ashen-faced daughter of the Queen's cousin Prince Michael crumpled to the ground, saved from a fall by her quick-thinking husband.

Heartbreak was written on the faces of Eugenie and her sister Beatrice as their husbands discreetly offered comfort before the royal party led by the King walked in. He was alongside his wife the new Queen, who had greeted him at the towering doors. As the angelic sounds of the Royal Chapel Choir soared up to the hammerbeam arch above, Charles appeared to sway with emotion.

As the Prince and Princess of Wales stared ahead, almost impassive to the history unfolding, Charles appeared to try and peer around the giant catafalque holding the Queen's coffin.

The passage read by the Archbishop of Canterbury from John 14:1-6, in which Jesus said to his disciples: “Do not let your hearts be troubled. You have faith in God; have faith also in me”, appeared to settle the monarch as his head bowed in a moment of silent reflection.

Lady Louise Windsor, who became close to the late Duke of Edinburgh due to their shared love of carriage driving, wiped away tears as her younger brother Viscount Severn nervously played with his hair and tapped his feet. Beatrice too appeared to bite down on her bottom lip.

But it was England rugby World Cup winner Mike Tindall who became completely overcome with emotion, wiping tears from his eyes as wife Zara gazed to the heavens. As he turned to leave, Charles perhaps considered the outpouring of emotion delivered by millions across the nation and around the world.

The number of mourners set to queue through the night to pay their respects to his mother will dwarf the 200,000 who did the same for the Queen Mother in 2002.

Her Majesty's long-held mantra that she had to be seen to be believed will be realised by many, many more over the next few days.

BY MATT ROPER

Shivering in damp clothes as rain pounds my poncho, around 3am I begin to wonder if I'll make it through the night.

It's been pouring for hours, my backside is numb on the cold concrete and my socks sodden. Yet there are still 15 hours before this queue is even due to start moving.

On Tuesday I joined the very first royalist pilgrims queuing to see the Queen lying in state in Westminster Hall. Over the next four days more than a million people are expected to file past her coffin and pay their respects. And I am number 34, arriving a full 24 hours before the doors open.

5PM TUESDAY

The queue is only a few dozen people. Everyone seems excited – despite the 24 hours we will be in line.

There's instant camaraderie – we're soon chatting, sharing stories and calling each other by our numbers.

Steven Tanzer, 61, and his wife Nancy Judson, 60, from Connecticut, US – numbers 35 and 36 – caught a last-minute flight to London.

"My mother loved the Queen, and she passed away five years ago", says Nancy. "We love British history. I knew we just had to come."

6PM

Those here are in two camps – the ultra prepared, with sleeping bags, tents and cooking stoves, and those, like me, with a tough night ahead. Jason, has just the clothes on his back. He had been visiting the floral tributes in Green Park when he "felt compelled" to join the queue.

7PM

Darkness falls. Nos 39 and 40 – Rob and Mo Paige, from Ugley, Essex, queued on the spur of the moment. Rob, 65, says: "I'd started pressure-washing the patio, when Maureen rushed out and said, 'We're going!' And that was that." "I'm a royalist," adds Mo, 67. "I've always loved the Queen."

8PM

The drizzle is not dampening spirits but is soaking my jacket.

Steven gets a six-pack of beers to share. Someone else passes out a pizza delivery. Mark Gater – no 32 – is starting to get emotional. "It's absolutely wonderful to be here," says the restaurateur from Cranborne, Dorset. "But tomorrow we're going to be floored by grief when we see her."

9PM

Now it's a downpour. My cheap poncho and souvenir shop Union Jack umbrella don't stop the rain from dripping down my legs and feet. Before long my socks are sopping.

The well-prepared get out their waterproofs and sleeping bags.

10PM

A gap in the rain raises spirits, and an impromptu rendition of God Save The King. TV crews rush over asking for a repeat. We sing it again for the BBC.

MIDNIGHT

Only the rain breaks the silence. We are huddled inside waterproofs or under umbrellas.

1AM YESTERDAY

The rain suddenly stops. People

It's wonderful to be here... but we will be floored by grief when we see her

– Mark Gater, in the queue

Mirror man joins crowds camping out for 24hrs to honour Queen emerge from their waterproof cocoons. "You see, that was Her Majesty working her magic," exclaims Mo, to murmurs of agreement.

2AM

The rain starts again, this time harder and colder, and we retreat into our silent hells once again.

3AM

Most of my clothes are wet, I'm shivering with cold, and am seriously wondering if I will be able to make it through the night. The next two hours seem to take an eternity to pass.

5AM

Daylight arrives, the rain stops. Sam boasts about how she slept for two hours. We Brits love queues and complaining about the weather, so everyone has a lot to talk about.

6AM

Mark is cooking a tin of all-day breakfast on his portable stove. Others have discovered a coffee shop inside nearby St Thomas' Hospital. I go myself, drying my clothes with the toilet hand dryer as someone saves my place.

7AM

Many in the queue are reflecting on the day ahead. "I'm going to cry my eyes out," says Linda.

"The Queen was in the ATS [Auxiliary Territorial Service], and so was my mum. That's where the emotion is coming from, it's like she was the last link to mum."

9AM

Waiting for days was so worth it

BY AMY-CLARE MARTIN, MATTHEW YOUNG, DAVE BURKE and LIZZY BUCHAN

THE first mourners to see the Queen lying in state were left feeling overwhelmed.

The most dedicated have queued for up to three days to be first to pay their respects.

Anne Daley, 65, of Cardiff, second in the queue, joined at 11.35am on Monday. She said: "It was shattering and incredibly upsetting. It was total silence, you felt like singing Ave Maria. It was just for seconds but was totally worth it."

Nina Kristofferson, 40, from North London, who joined the queue at 5am on Tuesday, braved downpours overnight and packed a change of clothes and some fresh make-up to look her best for the Queen.

Nina told the Mirror: "I was tearful. It was an honour just to stand there and take it all in. To give thanks and give a little curtsy. It was overwhelming."

Prof Chris Imafidon, from Epping, Essex, seventh in the queue, said: "It was very emotional. I was frozen in time. Everyone should go."

Delroy Morrison, 61, from Wembley, West London, said the wait was a "piece of cake" next to the Queen's 70 years of service: "I said 'thank you my Queen, you have done a great job as you promised'."

While Monica Farag, 61, said: "As I stepped outside, a bird dropped a small, white feather that I kept. That's a good sign that our beloved Queen is at peace."

"It was an honour to be there. To give a little curtsy and say thanks"

Rob and Mo are planning what they're going to do before the Queen's casket. "I'm going to curtsy," says Mo.

"I wish I'd come in a pretty dress. I can show how much I respect and admire her." Rob is going to bow, he says: "It's going to be overwhelming."

MIDDAY

Glyn Norris, 63, from Loughton, Essex, is also thinking about entering the hall. "It's almost like having your own private audience with her, in spirit. She was the mother and grandmother I never met, a constant in my life."

2PM

A chorus of God Save The Queen ripples through the crowd as people watch Her Majesty's coffin leave Buckingham Palace on their phones at 2.22.

3PM

I am flagging now after 22 hours of waiting outside.

But soon, stewards start calling us forward and for the first time since 5pm yesterday we are on the move.

We walk over Lambeth Bridge and into Victoria Gardens on the side of the Houses of Parliament. The huge queue of people on the capital's South Bank continues to grow.

4PM

In a sombre mood we walk slowly towards the Houses of Parliament.

We are the first group of mourners that are being taken to see the Queen.

Through airport-style security, then we pause outside the entrance of Westminster Hall. This next 30 minutes is the longest wait of all.

"My heart's palpitating," whispers

Mo as we are ushered inside the oldest building on the Parliamentary estate.

5PM

As I enter the hall, there's a sense of being a part of a moment of history that will never be forgotten.

But what chokes me up is seeing a young girl curtsy then wave the Queen goodbye. It's been a tough, long 24 hours, but worth it.

VOICE OF THE

DAILY MirrorWe share their grief

THE Queen left Buckingham Palace for the final time yesterday to the sound of muffled bells and sombre music.

The procession to Westminster Hall was a display of precision-perfect pageantry.

Ahead of the gun carriage bearing Her Majesty's coffin marched the Household Division, behind walked the King, his sister and brothers, and princes William and Harry.

Along the route well-wishers stood in silence to pay their respects to the country's longest-serving Monarch. It was a national moment of symbolism and solemnity.

It was also a very personal occasion for the Queen's children and grandchildren. A reminder that Her Majesty was not just the head of state but also the head of a family.

The members of the Royal Family have not wavered in their public duties since the Queen's passing, even though these have left them with almost no time to mourn.

For William and Harry the ceremony must have brought back memories of walking behind their mother's coffin. Yesterday they stood side by side again, united in grief.

Health folly

ONE of the few decent policies proposed by Boris Johnson was to curb the consumption and promotion of junk food.

Liz Truss has now signalled she wants to ditch her predecessor's anti-obesity strategy.

How misguided. One in three adults in Britain is overweight and nearly a quarter of year 6 primary school kids are classed as obese.

This is more pressure on the NHS. Treating diabetes alone costs around £9billion a year.

A Government which cared about health and the NHS would pursue a junk food ban.

Politicians

Prime Minister Liz Truss heads a political line-up including all the Queen's surviving former Prime Ministers: Boris Johnson, Theresa May, David Cameron, Gordon Brown, Tony Blair and Sir John Major.

Labour leader Keir Starmer is likely to be there, along with Scottish First Minister Nicola Sturgeon and Welsh First Minister Mark Drakeford.

European Royal families

A long list of European royalty - many related to the Queen - are expected on Monday.

Belgium's King Philippe and Queen Mathilde have confirmed they will be there, as have the Netherlands' King Willem-Alexander and his wife, Queen Maxima, along with his mother, former Dutch queen Princess Beatrix.

King Felipe and Queen Letizia of Spain have accepted an invitation, as have the royals in Norway, Sweden, and Denmark.

QUEEN ELIZABETH II: 1926-2022

BY ROS WYNNE-JONES

Theirs was an extraordinary friendship, the South African freedom fighter-turned-President and Her Majesty, the Queen. He called her Elizabeth, she called him Nelson.

Nelson Mandela also had a Xhosa nickname for his friend Queen Elizabeth II – Motlalepula, which means “to come with rain”. So familiar was the relationship between the two global icons, that he even teased the Queen about losing weight.

President Mandela never forgot the Queen’s refusal to travel to South Africa during the apartheid years – despite the differing views of her Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher – which would have given the country’s racist policies tacit approval.

Now, Zelda La Grange, his chief of staff and closest aide for 20 years, reveals how close they were. “They never missed each other’s birthdays or important life events,” she says.

“When Mr Mandela was diagnosed with cancer, the Queen sent a letter. When he lost his only surviving son to HIV/AIDS, the Queen called to sympathise.”

The President felt such solidarity with the Queen, Zelda, 51, says, that he once turned down an “enormous” donation.

“In the early 2000s a very wealthy UK businessman offered Mr Mandela an enormous amount of money to meet with him and be photographed with him for the media,” she remembers. “The man was at odds with the Royal Family. Mr Mandela turned down the offer as he wanted to respect the relationship with Her Majesty and cited this in explaining his decision to us.”

Zelda, known as Mandela’s rock and right-hand woman, recalls that Mr Mandela could be mischievous in his dealings with the Queen. On one visit, “as he approached her, he said: “Elizabeth, you’ve lost weight”. The Queen could not contain her laughter.

“On another occasion Mr Mandela’s wife reminded him that one ought not to address the Queen by her first name and he responded: ‘Why not? She calls me Nelson’.

“Of course, Mr Mandela then also related the story to Her Majesty and both enjoyed such lighter moments outside the constraints of formality and protocol.”

It was a relationship forged in the Queen’s love of Africa, which she visited 21 times during her 70-year reign, and Mandela’s Anglo-philic love of her home country.

“Mr Mandela appreciated the Queen’s respect for tradition,” she says. “And he often shared much of his own Xhosa culture and tradition, some of it very intimate, with the Queen.”

Her Majesty’s first ever official visit to Africa in 1947 began in South Africa, while still a 21-year-old princess, the year before the horrific legalised racism of apartheid began under the nationalist government of D F Malan.

Although she observed the strict neutrality of her role, and never spoke out against apartheid, Her Majesty did not set foot in the country again until 1995, the year after apartheid ended – invited by Mandela.

In 1991, after his release from 27 years of incarceration, but before he became President, the Queen invited Mandela to the Commonwealth Summit in Harare, Zimbabwe, and the royal banquet. A break with protocol, because did not have the required rank to attend.

In late March of 1995, when he had become President, The Queen landed at Durban airport for an official visit. Her arrival heralded the best rainy season in a decade. Mandela hailed the arrival of Motlalepula.

“As a token of our affection to Her Majesty, we conferred on her the name Motlalepula,” he explained. In 1997, at a banquet for Prince Charles’ visit to South Africa.

“Because her visit coincided with torrential rains as we had not experienced in a long time.” He joked that South Africa urgently needed the Queen to visit again as South Africa was suffering from drought caused by El Nino. “But,” he said, “we can rest content that a part of her soul and her magic is with us today.”

The Queen had invited President Mandela to the UK for a state visit the previous year. Wearing a rare suit and tie, the President had travelled with her in a horse-drawn carriage.

The Queen had agreed to a Two Nations concert at the Royal Albert Hall instead of a traditional banquet. Aides were shocked to see Mandela, this time in a black silk shirt, start dancing in the Royal Box, and HM join in swaying and clapping too.

When the Queen took the throne in 1952, more than a quarter of the world’s population was under British imperial rule, the scars of which linger. Zelda says Mr Mandela would never have shied away from this “difficult issue”.

“Throughout his Presidency and thereafter he focused on reconciliation and bringing about circumstances conducive for creating a more equal and just society,” she says. “All his actions, including relationships with people from across the world, had threads of that theme.

"I was not privy to conversations during Mr Mandela's first meetings with Her Majesty, but I have no doubt that he discussed the difficult issues too as he never shied away from such.

"I can only imagine that he perhaps told her that one should not allow the past to impair us from moving forward." She says Mr Mandela's speech at the State Banquet in his honour hosted by Her Majesty in London made this view clear.

"The enthusiasm with which you were welcomed, wherever you went in our country, will have told you more clearly than words that the antagonisms of past centuries are no more," he told the Queen.

Mr Mandela saw past easy enmities, as Zelda herself knows well. Her extraordinary book, Good Morning,

Mr Mandela, tells the story of how she had grown up an apartheid-supporting, white Afrikaner and was working as a typist when Mandela became President.

He shocked her by speaking to her in the perfect Afrikaans he had learned while imprisoned on Robben Island. Instead of sacking white staff as they expected, she says he treated his staff from all backgrounds equally and with great kindness.

Zelda went on to become his Chief of Staff, and his gatekeeper 24 hours a day for many years. He nicknamed her Zeldina after a state visit to Russia in 1999 when he learned President Boris Yeltsin's wife was called Yeltsina. Nine years after her boss's death, Zelda says he most admired the Queen's sense of duty.

They were, she says, "two people who fully comprehended what it really meant to dedicate your entire life in service".

She adds that: "Even though they never verbalised it, how they perhaps yearned for some normality and the simple joys we take for granted."

Born in the same era, both icons would live on until their late 90s, President Mandela to 95, when he died in 2013, and the Queen to 96. "She was a well-respected matriarch in a patriarchal society and he admired that she led with that quiet inner strength," Zelda says.

"He was touched by the generosity of her time and that whenever they met it was on equal footing. There was no sense of grandeur but only the utmost respect for one another."

The two leaders shared, she says, "a sense of self-awareness that transcends most of us".

It was in this spirit that nonprofit organisation the Nelson Mandela Foundation this week wished the Queen "Hamba Kahle", or "go well".

King and I

WAS it just six months ago that I found myself waiting in a beautiful downstairs room inside Clarence House to meet the then Prince of Wales, now King Charles III? It simultaneously seems just like yesterday and a lifetime ago.

I was invited to Charles' residence in my role as editor of the Powerlist, an annual publication which celebrates the most influential Black people in Britain. HM (or, as then, HRH) wanted to meet the Powerlist team and Powerlistees as they're called, to hear more about our work and the people being celebrated.

There were pictures of his family, including Prince Harry and Meghan, on a side table and a painting of Jamaica which I believe had been a gift to the Queen Mother from Noel Coward.

There are so many different opinions about monarchy and the Royal Family. It wouldn't be betraying any confidences to say some people were less than enthusiastic and politely said they'd rather not attend.

But it's quite something to receive a card with a personal invitation from the future King to a reception at his home. But so much, of course, has changed for him and for us since then.

I'm not quite sure what I was expecting. Maybe for Prince Charles to pop in, whizz around and then leave almost as quickly as he arrived.

But it was very much the opposite of a whistle-stop visit. He arrived from a morning event in Southend-on-Sea – oh the glamour. Then, clutching a cup of tea on a saucer, he took his time to meet the assembled guests, grouped in bunches of five or six. Far from rushing, he greeted everyone with the same warmth and affection. He asked us questions and he wanted to hear more, something I wasn't expecting at all. He was relaxed and at ease. He smiled easily, listened intently and chatted with around 70 guests. He wanted to know how we found people on the list and how it was all put together.

Ever the sufferer of imposter syndrome, I did wonder how little old Eva ended up speaking with the future King of England at his house.

He afforded the same grace to everyone he met. His late mother the Queen had recently been diagnosed with Covid and he accepted our well wishes to her warmly – even if he was told the same thing 50 times.

There was none of the pen-related irritability we saw this week. But he's allowed to be irritated, right. Grieving the loss of a beloved parent is something that most of us get to do in private with family and loved ones. I have. It's hugely private and intimate, yet Charles is doing it in front of the whole world and there is no hiding place.

What a bizarre system the hereditary process is – one that means in order to get the top job, the person you hold most dear has to die.

Watching him walk behind his mother's coffin, I saw past a King and instead witnessed a grieving man who knows the enormity of the role he now has to play as the country's head of state.

Naturally, the smile and ease I observed just a few months ago were gone, replaced with something far more serious. I hope in the months to come he is able to smile again.

“We can grieve in private. He is doing it in front of the whole world.”

EU demands oil and gas revenue cap

BY BEN GLAZE
Deputy Political Editor

BRUSSELS chief Ursula von der Leyen yesterday outlined plans for a revenue cap on cash-soaked electricity firms.

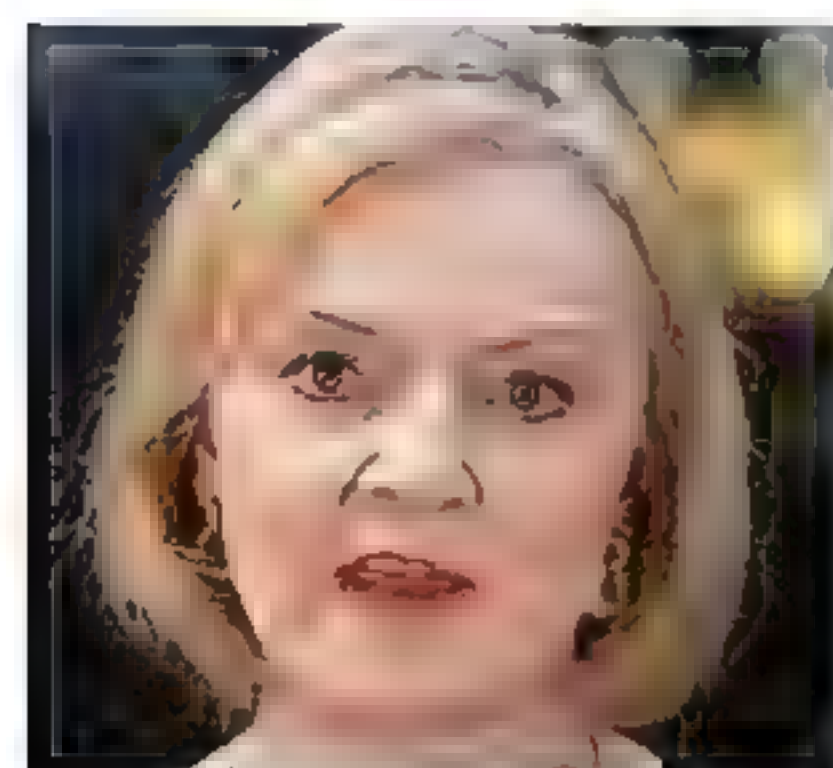

The European Commission President also wants a windfall tax on oil and gas firms growing rich due to price spikes triggered by Russia invading Ukraine.

Money raised would be used to help millions of hard-up households.

She said: "It is wrong to receive extraordinary... profits benefiting from war. Profits must be shared and channelled to those who need it most."

Consumers using less energy would help to bring down the price, she said.

Her comments came in her annual State of the Union talk to the European Parliament in Strasbourg.

Bills help for firms will be 'backdated'

BY LIZZY BUCHAN
and DAN BLOOM

BUSINESSES facing an energy bills crisis may have to wait several weeks to get the help promised by the new Prime Minister.

Liz Truss's official spokesman pledged to support businesses with October bills but said there may be "backdating".

Further details are expected next week.

Ms Truss unveiled her support package last week but it was immediately overshadowed by the Queen's death.

The "bills guarantee" freezes a typical home's bills at £2,500 a year for two years from October 1.

But firms are still unsure what support they will get. No10 said the delay was because "we're having to build a brand new system to deliver this".

MILK UP 44%

BY GRAHAM HISCOTT Head of Business

MILK prices have leaped by more than 44% in the past year, official figures revealed yesterday.

The average price of a pint of milk has soared from 43p last summer to 62p now, according to the Office for National Statistics.

Cheddar cheese has gone from a typical £6.20 per kg to £7.53, up 21%.

Elsewhere, an average white sliced loaf of bread has risen 19% from £1.06 to £1.26, while a 500g tub of spreadable butter is up 30% from £3.20 to £4.18.

The ONS confirmed food and drinks prices overall jumped more than 13% year on year last month – the biggest rise since 2008.

Price rises have been driven by a host of factors, including increased energy, transportation and labour costs.

ONS data showed inflation eased

Food and drink prices rocket as high inflation rate hits families slightly last month, from a 40-year high of 10.1% in the year to July to 9.9%.

The first dip in 10 months followed falls in petrol and diesel prices from record highs. But prices are still up by nearly a third on a year ago.

Experts predict the peak in inflation could be lower than was feared due to the Government's promised energy price freeze from October.

The Bank had expected it would reach more than 13% later this year. Despite inflation easing, it is predicted to press ahead with a 0.5 percentage point base rate rise to 2.25% next week.

CALL Frances O'Grady

That would hit millions of borrowers but deliver help for savers – if providers pass it on.

TUC General Secretary Frances O'Grady said: "Inflation is still very high and hitting family budgets hard."

"The Chancellor's mini budget next week should use the power of government to help with surging costs this winter."

Economist Jack Leslie, of think tank the Resolution Foundation, said: "High inflation continues to drive the cost of living crisis, but the outlook has brightened considerably this week."

"The Energy Price Guarantee should prevent a second winter surge in prices, while factory gate inflation is starting to ease."

Next month's Consumer Prices Index is likely to determine how much the state pension will rise by next April. Analyst Helen Morrissey, from pensions broker Hargreaves Lansdown, said it could surpass £200 per week.

Healthier diet laws in doubt

BY MARTIN BAGOT Health Editor
LIZ Truss could scrap the Government's anti-obesity strategy after ministers launched a review of plans to encourage people to eat less junk food.

Health experts fear the new PM could reverse the planned ban on sweets and chocolates being forced under shoppers' noses in checkout aisles. The review, ordered by the Treasury, could also scrap a ban on junk food ads on TV before 9pm as well as unhealthy multi-buy deals.

Ms Truss won the Tory leadership by boasting to members of her opposition to "nanny state" policies.

But Tam Fry, chair of the National Obesity Forum, said: "Liz Truss's plan to scrap the ban on sweets at store exits is a retrograde step."

"Junk food ads and multi-buy deals on unhealthy products are proven risk factors for obesity. Bans on both will not be 'nanny state' but good legislation for the ultimate health of the nation."

Britain has one of the highest rates of obesity in Europe, with almost two-thirds of adults overweight or obese. The Department of Health and Social Care has been approached for comment.

THE WAR IN

BY STEPHEN WHITE

RUSSIA is getting weapons from other pariah states to prop up its disastrous invasion of Ukraine, military experts believe.

A Ministry of Defence update said: "Russia is almost certainly increasingly sourcing weaponry from other heavily sanctioned states like Iran and North Korea as its own stocks dwindle."

Ukrainian forces shot down an Iranian-made Shahed-136 drone, which analysts think is evidence of Moscow's use of systems sourced from Tehran.

Russian forces have sustained heavy losses since the invasion of Ukraine began in February, and sanctions have restricted access to key components for its weapons systems.

And Ukrainian forces have made huge gains recently.

President Zelenskyy yesterday visited his triumphant troops in the recaptured city of Izyum.

He watched a flag-raising ceremony, thanked the fighters and vowed that the Ukrainian flag would return to every city and village in the country.

Vladimir Putin's troops left behind large amounts of ammunition and equipment as they fled, in their worst defeat since they were driven back from the capital Kyiv in March.

Mr Zelenskyy said his forces were fortifying their hold over more than 3,000 square miles of retaken territory in the Kharkiv region of eastern Ukraine.

He said in a speech: "Before, when we looked up, we always looked for the blue sky, the sun.

"And today we, and especially the people in the temporarily occupied territories, looking up, are looking for only one thing - the flag of our state.

"This means the heroes are here.

"This means the enemy is gone."

While Russia still controls around a fifth of Ukraine, towns in the eastern Donbas region that fell early in the war are now back in the sights of Kyiv's advancing forces.

Ukraine's Vice Prime Minister Olga Stefanishyna said Russian officials had reached out to Ukraine to negotiate in recent days, a move she believes was aimed at slowing the rapid

THE EU needs to show "resolve" against Russia and not appease it, Brussels chief Ursula von der Leyen warned yesterday.

The European Commission President urged the bloc's 27 nations to maintain solidarity as Vladimir Putin tries to strangle gas supplies.

Delivering her annual State of the Union speech, she added: "The sanctions are here to stay. This is the time for us to show resolve, not appeasement.

"This is not only a war unleashed by Russia against Ukraine; this is a war on our energy, a war on our economy, a war on our values."

Explaining how Russia's industry is in "tatters", she said: "The Russian military is taking chips from dishwashers and refrigerators to fix their military hardware, because they ran out of semiconductors."

Addressing Ukrainian First Lady Olena Zelenska, in Strasbourg for the speech to MEPs, she added: "You have given courage to the whole nation."

Putin's troops are also abandoning Melitopol, a city in the south-east.

In the newly freed village of Chkalovske in the Kharkiv region, Svit-

Chancellor Olaf Scholz added he spent 90 minutes on the phone to Putin urging a ceasefire and withdrawal of his forces, without success.

Kyiv meanwhile is trying to persuade Russian troops to surrender. It is launching shells filled with flyers reading: "Russians use you as cannon fodder. Your life doesn't mean anything for them." Ukraine says Russia launched eight cruise missiles at Kryvyi Rih in the south yesterday, aiming to disrupt water supplies. An official reported no civilian casualties.

■ An unconfirmed report said President Putin's car was attacked in a possible assassination attempt.

An anti-Kremlin news outlet reported a loud bang then smoke emerging from his limousine's left front wheel. The car drove on to safety.

LOVE Motsi with husband Evgenij

Motsi: In-laws fled bombs.. 10 refugees live with me

EXCLUSIVE TOM BRYANT
Head of Showbiz

STRICTLY Come Dancing star Motsi Mabuse has 10 Ukrainian refugees living in her house.

Show judge Motsi, who lives in Frankfurt, Germany, is married to 38-year-old dancer Evgenij Voznyuk, who is from Ukraine.

Motsi, 41, revealed: "We were asleep when Evgenij's mum called us on FaceTime at five o'clock in the morning and said 'There are bombs dropping.' It was so shocking.

"We heard the bombs through the phone; we saw everything.

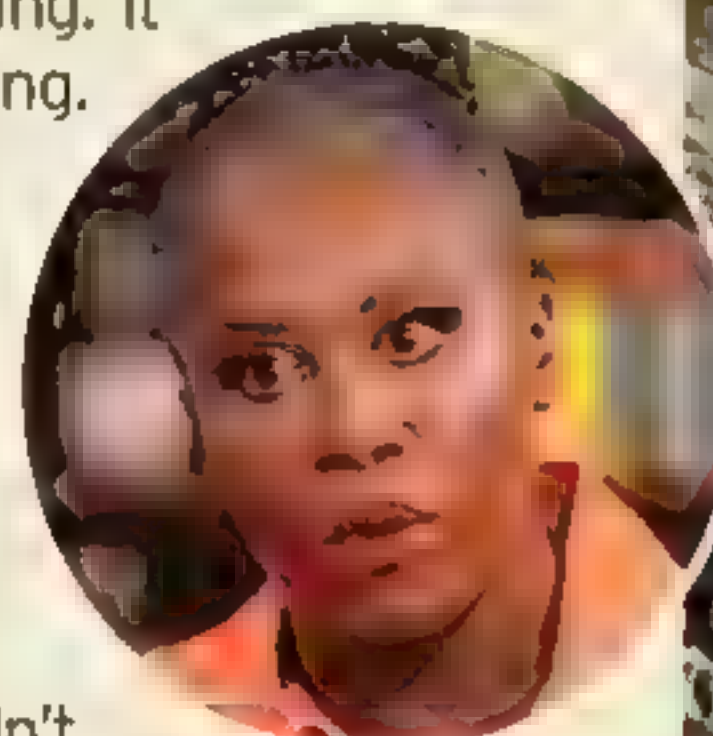

"His parents couldn't get out of the country for a week, but eventually they crossed the border, and at this moment we have about 10 people living with us - our family and refugees. We're trying to relocate everyone.

"It's a very different life now that my parents-in-law have come to live with us, possibly forever."

Writing in her memoir My Own Rhythm, Motsi said the new family set-up was taking a while to get used to. She said: "I don't speak Russian, although my daughter does. Kids are astonishing.

"Their brains are like sponges. My daughter is already answering questions in Russian. I look at her like she's an alien, like 'Is this really the person I gave birth to?'"

The 20th series of Strictly - featuring celebs such as TV host Helen Skelton, ex-England footballer Tony Adams and singer Fleur East - begins on BBC One on September 23 followed by the first live show on September 24.

TRAGIC Olivia Pratt-Korbel

Fave film will remind pals of little Olivia

BY JONATHAN HUMPHRIES

SCHOOL friends of Olivia Pratt-Korbel will watch her favourite film on the day of her funeral today.

The nine-year-old was shot dead in her home on August 22 by a gunman chasing Joseph Nee, 35.

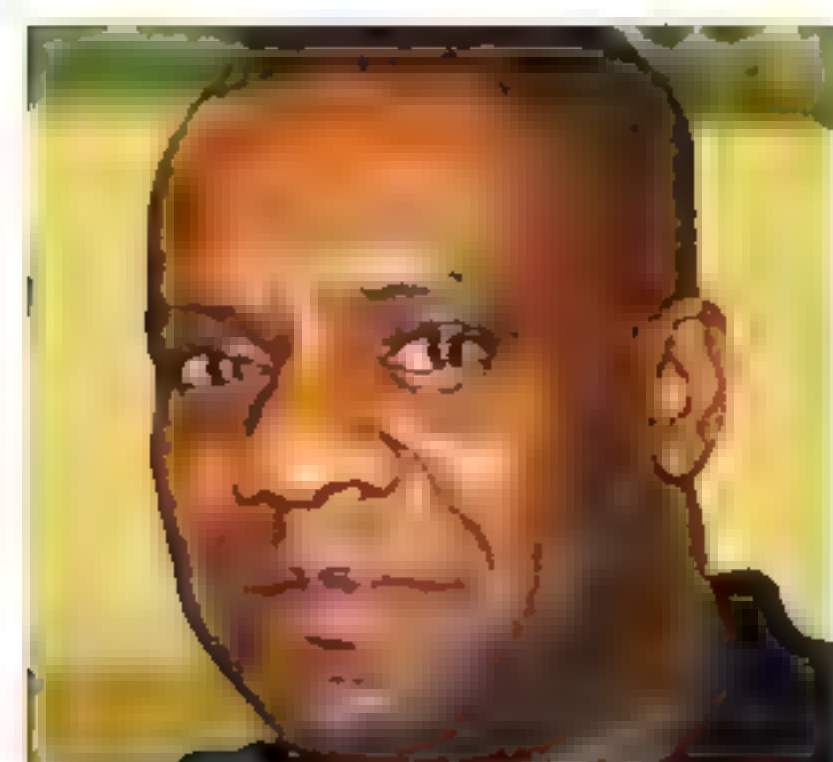

Her mum Cheryl Korbel, 46, was injured in the attack, in Dovecot, Liverpool.

Children of St Margaret Mary's Catholic Junior School in Huyton will watch Matilda, based on Roald Dahl's novel, in lieu of going to Olivia's funeral at a nearby church.

Head teacher Rebecca Wilkinson said of Olivia: "That smile would just light up the room."

Nine people have been arrested but none charged.

There is a £50,000 reward for information that leads to the conviction of Olivia's killer.

TASERED Dalian Atkinson

Killed Dalian 'due to start treatment'

BY MATTHEW COOPER

EX-FOOTBALLER Dalian Atkinson was due to start medical treatment the day after a fatal confrontation with two police officers, a court heard yesterday.

The court was told Mr Atkinson, 48, had become disturbed – probably due to toxins linked to renal failure – in the hours before he was tasered and kicked in the head by PC Benjamin Monk in 2016.

Monk was convicted of manslaughter last year.

His West Mercia Police colleague PC Mary Ellen Bettley-Smith 32, denies unlawfully assaulting Mr Atkinson in a re-trial.

It is alleged she "lashed out" with a baton at the ex-Aston Villa player in Telford, Shrops. Mr Atkinson died in hospital.

The trial at Birmingham crown court continues.

The comedian, who starred in Little Britain and co-hosts the Great British Bake Off, added he ate so many roasties he "couldn't really fit on screen any more".

His dad's death inspired him to lose weight. Matt said: "I'm 48, my dad died when he was 52. His dad died when he was, I think, 56. I was looking at the law of averages.

"I was very big. Eating a lot of roast potatoes... I still love them, I just don't eat as many."

Matt, who hosts Bake Off with Noel Fielding, 49, also told the Mid Point podcast with Gabby Logan that he and Little Britain co-star David Walliams are planning new shows.

Mel C: My sex assault hell night before first Spice gig

THE SHOW GOES ON! At Istanbul gig in 1997

BY MARK JEFFERIES
Showbiz Editor

MELANIE Chisholm has revealed she was sexually assaulted the night before the Spice Girls' first live gig.

The singer, then known as Mel C, had booked a massage at her hotel in Istanbul, Turkey.

She said she buried the assault in the back of her mind until she wrote her book, Who I Am: My Story, which is published today.

Mel, 23 at the time, said she went ahead with the performance for 8,000 fans in 1997 because she didn't want to upset anyone.

The 48-year-old revealed: "Everything was leading to the pinnacle of everything I'd ever wanted to do and ever wanted to be. So here we were, the eve of the first ever Spice Girls show, so I treat myself to a massage.

"What happened to me I kind of buried immediately. I didn't want to make a fuss, but also I didn't have time to deal with it.

"And because I didn't deal with it, I allowed that to be buried for years and years and years.

"Then when I was writing the book it came to me in a dream, or I kind of woke up and it was in my mind and it was like, 'Oh my gosh, I haven't even thought about having that in the book'. Then of course I had to think, 'Do I want to reveal this?'.

"And I just thought, 'I think it's really important for me to finally deal with it and process it'.

"I suppose in a version of sexual assault it's a mild version, but I felt violated.

"I felt very vulnerable. I felt embarrassed and then I felt unsure: 'have I got this right, what's Mel told the How to Fail podcast how her mental wellbeing is still affected.

She said: "Even now, I live with depression. I've learned very much how to deal with it and keep it at bay, but sometimes it can get the better of me.

"Sometimes it felt like my spark had gone out. But there's a little flicker even in my darkest moments and it's pulled me through."

CHERYL Baker says she has no plans to retire despite being 68, because it's performing on stage that keeps her young.

The singer, who shot to fame in Eurovision-winning band Bucks Fizz, added: "If I worked in a bank, I'd be crossing off the days to retirement."

"But I do something I really love. Yesterday, I was leaping about the stage singing and listening to the audience cheering."

Cheryl credits Bucks Fizz's famous dance move, where the boys ripped off the girls' skirts, for the 1981 Eurovision victory.

And she said fans love it when she, Jay Aston and Mike Nolan still do the stunt these days. The trio from the original band now perform as The Fizz.

Souness: My shake made Tyson wince

BY STUART MACDONALD

GRAEME Souness claims he left boxer Tyson Fury wincing in pain after an overly firm handshake.

The Liverpool legend, 69, said world heavyweight champion Fury was hurt when they greeted each other at a football match.

The sports pundit said: "There was a big fight coming up in Manchester and I was with Sky doing a show at Old Trafford."

"Tyson came along and I shook his hand and he winced. I'm thinking 'He's a boxer'. There was a fight coming up so I think he was worried about damaging his hand."

Former Scotland captain Graeme admitted that he would be no match for Tyson, 34, in the ring.

He said: "I once got into a ring with a pal and he properly bashed me up."

RESTLESS Aviator star Leonardo DiCaprio has long been known to take off once his partners hit 25.

But now the 47-year-old Hollywood actor has been pictured with rumoured new flame, US model Gigi Hadid.

And at 27, she is two years past what is often his cut-off point... although his preference for models remains.

The belief that Leo doesn't date over-25s is so prevalent in showbiz that host Ricky Gervais joked about it in front of the actor at the 2020 Golden Globes.

He quipped that the film Once Upon A Time in Hollywood was so long that: "[Leo] attended the premiere and by the end his date was too old for him."

Leo has only just split from US model and actress Camila Morrone, who he dated for four years, until shortly after she turned 25.

In 2005, he broke up with Brazilian model Gisele Bundchen when she was 23.

He then dated another model, Israeli Bar Refaeli, from later that year until 2010, when she turned 25.

And Danish model Nina Agdal was 25 when the couple split after a year in 2017.

Sources in the US have claimed Leo and Gigi are still "getting to know" each other.

She split from her daughter Khai's father Zayn Malik, 29, in October last year.

Race to get Norman to defibrillator

EXCLUSIVE
Health & Science Editor

A YACHTSMAN who had a heart attack while sailing on a windy lake survived thanks to his crew-mate, who stopped the boat from capsizing to get him to a defibrillator

Norman Khine, 52, a father of three, collapsed during a yacht race, leaving 70-year-old Steve Bell to sail solo.

Norman said: "My chest felt like it was going to explode. It was really windy and I should have been helping Steve, but I couldn't do anything. I knew if we capsized and I fell in, I would be dead."

Steve said: "Norman was semi-prone at the bottom of the boat. It was windy and I was struggling to sail the boat on my own, but it was clear there was a big problem and I needed to help Norman." Steve managed to get Norman on to a rescue boat on the Queen Mary Reservoir, Ashford, Surrey.

Norman said: "I made a last effort to jump to the rescue boat. Then I passed out." He was taken to the pontoon, where staff and a visitor began resuscitation using a sailing club defibrillator.

Norman, from Purley, South London, said: "Once I got on the rescue boat, I don't remember anything until I woke up, surrounded by paramedics." They took him to hospital, where he had coronary angioplasty – a small balloon inserted into one of the arteries to widen and unblock it. He later had a heart bypass at St Thomas' Hospital in London and recovered well.

The Mirror is campaigning for more defibrillators in schools, sports clubs, shops and other public buildings.

Prof Mark O'Neill, Clinical Director for Cardiovascular Services at Guy's and St Thomas' was sailing on the reservoir when Norman had his heart attack in April. He said: "Norman has made an excellent, quite unusual recovery."

"This is down to the quick responses and the right sort of care by everyone."

Tony Bishop, secretary of the Queen Mary Sailing Club, said the club has had a defibrillator for 10 years and holds regular safety training sessions for staff. He said: "Our staff were really calm on the day. Norman has been a member for years and we will be pleased to see him back on the water, hopefully soon."

Norman said: "I'm lucky to be alive."

Chess master faces sex toy scandal after beating No 1

BY CHRISTOPHER BUCKTIN
US Editor

THE world of chess has been rocked by claims a 19-year-old grandmaster used a sex toy to beat the game's top player.

Rumours are swirling that Hans Niemann inserted wireless vibrating beads inside him before his win over Magnus Carlsen.

Fans have speculated that an accomplice sent a coded message via the sex toy, after being told the perfect move by an artificial intelligence program.

American Niemann beat the Norwegian world champion in the Sinquefeld Cup on September 4, ending his 53-wins streak.

Carlsen, 31, then withdrew from the tournament in a highly unusual move.

He tweeted a cryptic video of former Chelsea football manager José Mourinho saying: "I prefer really not to speak. If I speak, I am in big trouble."

Mourinho was talking about a game in which his team lost because of questionable refereeing.

Niemann said: "If they want me to strip fully naked, I will do it. I don't care. I know I am clean."

A representative for Carlsen did not respond.

Four held by Ashley Dale murder cops

FOUR men have been arrested by detectives investigating the murder of Ashley Dale in Liverpool.

Environmental health officer Ashley, 28, died after a gunman forced her front door and opened fire "indiscriminately".

She was found in her rear garden on August 21 and died later in hospital.

Police do not believe she was the intended target.

The four men were arrested in Cumbria and Merseyside. Three of them – aged 27, 40 and 35 – were last night being held on suspicion of murder and possession of a firearm.

A fourth man, aged 57, was arrested on suspicion of assisting an offender.

Serbian 'war criminal' living quietly in Derby set to be extradited

Neighbours had no idea

EXCLUSIVE
BY DAN WARBURTON

A SUSPECTED war criminal living quietly on a UK council estate is to be extradited to Croatia.

Milenko Maric has lost his eight-year legal fight to stay in Britain.

The 63-year-old's neighbours were unaware that he was wanted for his alleged role in a ruthless militia during the Balkans War.

But this week an extradition ruling said he should be booted out of the UK to face charges in Croatia.

He faces up to 20 years if convicted.

A source said: "Maric has fought for a long time to avoid being sent back to Croatia but now he'll have to face the music."

Father-of-three Maric, who denies he is a war criminal, appears to be a normal family man dedicated to his wife and kids.

But he is also accused of being a former Croatian Serb police officer who assaulted non-Serb civilians.

Maric, who lives in a modest council house in the Pear Tree suburb of inner-city Derby, is accused of being part of a violent militia.

Prosecutors in his homeland claim he was involved in assaults in August and September 1991, in a prison.

It is alleged that one victim was attacked by Maric along with two other militia men using truncheons on several occasions, causing injuries to his entire body.

Legal documents state: "It is alleged that MM [Milenko Maric], as a member of the Secretariat for International Affairs of Manastir, removed a number of civilians of non-Serbian ethnic origin, from the Baranya region and assaulted them."

Baranya was occupied by Serb paramilitaries throughout the 1991-95 war while Croatia battled for independence from the former Yugoslavia.

Maric was on a Croat list of 50 suspected war criminals in 2001. That year a Croatian prosecutor's office issued a warrant for his arrest for crimes against humanity.

But by then Maric, who vigorously denies the claims against him, had claimed asylum in the UK. He was given indefinite leave to remain.

A trial in Croatia found Maric innocent in his absence but the country's Supreme Court overturned the decision and a new international arrest warrant was issued.

Central London magistrates finally ordered the extradition this week.

Maric must stay in Leicestershire or Derbyshire and has to wear an electronic tag. A date for his extradition has not yet been set.

Village looks to the sky as the Queen flies overhead

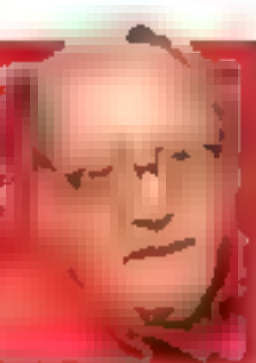

THEY turned out in Barnoldswick, Lancs, to watch the Queen's last flight.

Dozens peered up as the plane with Her Majesty's coffin flew by. Aero-scanners plotted its route from Edinburgh.

"It was good," says bus driver Andy, who alerted his neighbours on Facebook. "It was like being part of history. They say she always wanted to live in the Ribbles Valley, and that was her final journey."

Stories like that remind you of how momentous are these times. And little things like the sign on the roundabout into Keighley, flashing "We Mourn The Death of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth."

In the bus station, the departure board runs a continuous message: "West Yorkshire Remembers Her Majesty The Queen." The flag outside Airedale hospital, opened by the then Prince Charles in 1972, is flying at half mast, like the one at Cross Hills Social Club.

On my street, balloons – many royal purple – appeared on lamp-posts. They must be for our new King.

And over the border in Barnoldswick, the anonymous Barlick Yarnies have decorated the town's post boxes with brightly coloured knitted woollen crowns.

These, too, appeared overnight. In our village, I notice more portraits of Her Majesty in shop windows. Leighton's estate agent has four slots devoted to engaging photographs.

And in touristy Skipton, charity shops have gone to town with window dressing.

Oxfam has red, white and blue women's clothes, plus the dark side represented by black garments and shoes.

It's similar at Sense and Age Concern, a fashion shop has a flag in the window, as does a travel agent. I sense public feeling intensifying as the funeral approaches.

1,600 ASIAN GIANT HORNETS SURVIVE 28HRS IN FREEZER

KILLER hornets from a giant nest weighing more than 17lb went on the attack after 28 hours in a freezer.

It came after more than 1,600 Asian giant hornets were hoovered up, put in a plastic bag and frozen alive so they could be dissected.

But expert John de Carteret's team was stunned to discover the freezing process had failed to wipe out a large number of them.

The 3ft-wide nest was discovered by a dog walker in a field in Vallee des Vaux, Jersey, on Saturday. It is one of a record 123 nests found on the Channel Islands this year.

The insects could decimate the UK's native bee population.

Mr De Carteret said of the threat: "We found a number of

The species began to spread in Europe in 2004. They can kill someone with an allergy.

BREAK-IN Barry Douglas

Man took life after drunken flume horror

BY KATIE BOYDEN

A MAN who broke his legs after breaking into a lido killed himself in part over fears he could be left crippled, an inquest has heard.

Barry Douglas, 44, was found dead at home on February 17 four months after his accident.

He and a friend broke into Aldershot Lido in Hampshire at 2am following a day of drinking. The pair went down a slide and hit a barrier.

Mr Douglas had to give up his job as a forklift driver when left in a wheelchair during his recovery.

His mother Ruth said: "He was worried about money. He was desperate to get back to work but there was a concern that he could be left crippled."

Coroner Christopher Wilkinson concluded: "Mr Douglas took his own life."

A DAILY multivitamin boosts brain power in the over-65s, research shows.

Scientists think taking the tablets for three years could mean cognitive decline slowing by 60%.

Principal investigator Professor Laura Baker said it is the first evidence of its kind in such a big study.

Prof Baker, from Wake Forest University in North Carolina in the US, added: "There's an urgent need for affordable interventions to protect cognition against decline in older adults."

Researchers said older adults deficient in some micronutrients may be at greater risk of dementia.

The study of 21,000 Americans found that those with significant cardiovascular disease benefited the most.

DARING DEEDS
Painting of Kavanagh in Sepoy guise

BRAVE
Thomas Henry Kavanagh

BY DAN WARBURTON

A VICTORIA Cross awarded to a clerk who saved the lives of a whole garrison of soldiers sold at auction yesterday for a record £1million.

Irishman Thomas "Henry" Kavanagh was a civil clerk in Lucknow when the Indian Rebellion broke out in 1857.

The 36-year-old volunteered to escape the surrounded British stronghold in the city at night and fetch reinforcements.

He crossed enemy lines to make contact with the camp of the Commander-in-Chief and then guide the forces through the city to the beleaguered garrison by the safest route.

He disguised himself as an Indian Sepoy soldier and, with a scout, jostled past armed rebels in narrow streets.

They talked their way past sentries, forded deep rivers, tramped through swamps and just avoided capture after startling a farmer who raised the alarm.

Kavanagh, who was born on July 15, 1821, in Mullingar, Co Westmeath, Ireland, then became a Victorian legend.

He said: "I resolved to die in the struggle rather than survive it with no better fame than I took into it."

He died in November 1882 in Gibraltar.

Bought by a collector, his VC medal is one of only two not currently held by a museum. The medal had a pre-sale estimate of £300,000 to £400,000 at the auction at Noonans in London.

The medal had a hammer price of £750,000 but with commissions the final gross price paid was £1,003,520.

It is believed to be a world-record price for a Victoria Cross medal.

The winning bid was over the internet after a fierce bidding war.

Oliver Pepys, medal specialist at Noonans, said: "Kavanagh's gallantry at Lucknow 165 years ago stands out as one of the most premeditated and sustained acts of gallantry in the history of the Victoria Cross and the price achieved at auction demonstrates the high regard which Kavanagh is still held in today."

Pierce Noonan, chairman and CEO of Noonans auctions, added: "The record price achieved for Kavanagh's Victoria Cross reflects not just his extraordinary gallantry, but also the strength of the market for small collectibles more generally."

CELEBRATING

BY NATASHA WYNARCZYK

Samantha Giles has delighted fans of Emmerdale for more than 20 years as Bernice Blackstock, but things could have been very different as the actress had initially auditioned for another part as Tricia Dingle.

The role for the now-deceased Tricia went to Sheree Murphy, but there were no hard feelings on Samantha's part.

She says: "I remember sitting next to Sheree in the audition reception, chatting away. She got the part and was absolutely brilliant and right for it. But I was very lucky that the producers came up with another part and offered me Bernice."

Two months after Sheree made her first on-screen appearance, in September 1998, Samantha joined the friend she had made at that audition on Emmerdale.

Now, 51-year-old Samantha, who grew up watching the soap with her grandparents, is looking forward to being a part of the show's 50th anniversary celebrations.

Samantha has had just two breaks from Emmerdale, in 2004 and 2019, when she took time out to focus on writing projects.

Emmerdale fans were delighted when she returned as Bernice in May last year, and since then she has been the focus of popular storylines, such as the love triangle with a former flame.

She has also supported her half-sister Nicola King, played by Nicola Wheeler, with her mental health struggles after she was beaten by a gang of teenagers.

Talking about the 50th anniversary, Samantha says: "We are very busy at the moment with filming it all.

"It's really exciting. Emmerdale has lasted so long because we have fantastic scenery. People just love looking at the village and it's breathtaking. I've been going to the set for so many years and I still stop and think, 'This is beautiful'."

Away from Emmerdale, Samantha is a white witch. She got interested in Wicca, a pagan religion, after her mum taught her how to read palms as a youngster.

Samantha started creating spells for her family and friends, and now sells them on her website. They include incantations for finding a new job, beating exam stress and mending a broken heart.

One of her happy clients is This Morning soap expert Sharon Marshall, who had six failed rounds of IVF, but became a mum to daughter Betsey in 2018 after trying out one of Samantha's spells.

Samantha says: "Sharon asked me for a change of luck charm. It can be hard when you're going through something like IVF and doctors are telling you to just relax and try not to think about it.

"Sometimes you just need to have that belief that it will happen and maybe it was coincidence, but it worked for her."

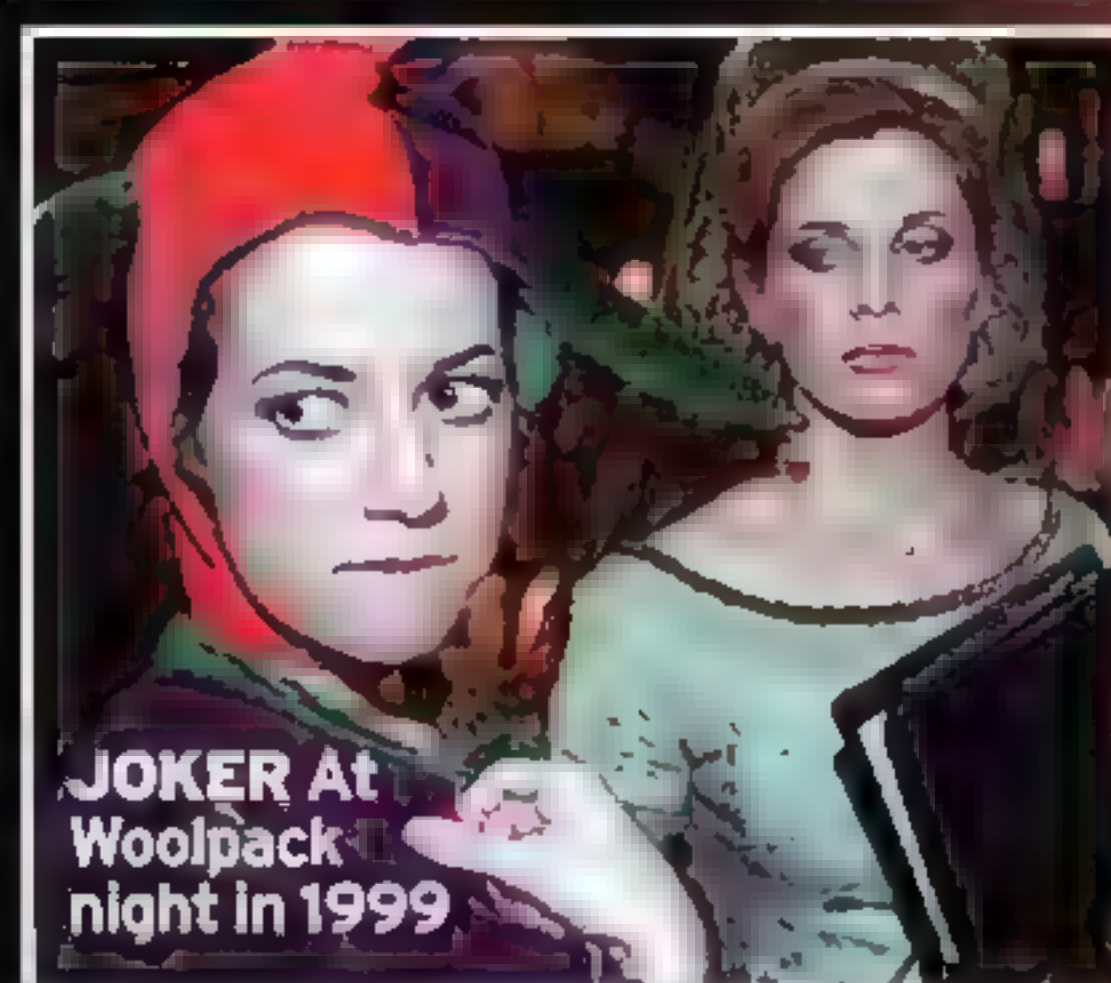

In Emmerdale, Bernice had no need of spells when she got pregnant, giving birth on Christmas Day, 2001. Viewers were hooked as baby Gabby was either by Bernice's husband Ashley, (John Middleton) or her lover Carlos (Gary Turner). A paternity test later showed vicar Ashley was the dad.

Samantha says that since lockdown, more people have become interested in witchcraft and visited her site.

She says: "Because life is so hard at the moment, financially and mentally, for everybody, people are turning to alternative therapies, and my spell kits are one of those things. They are more like self-help.

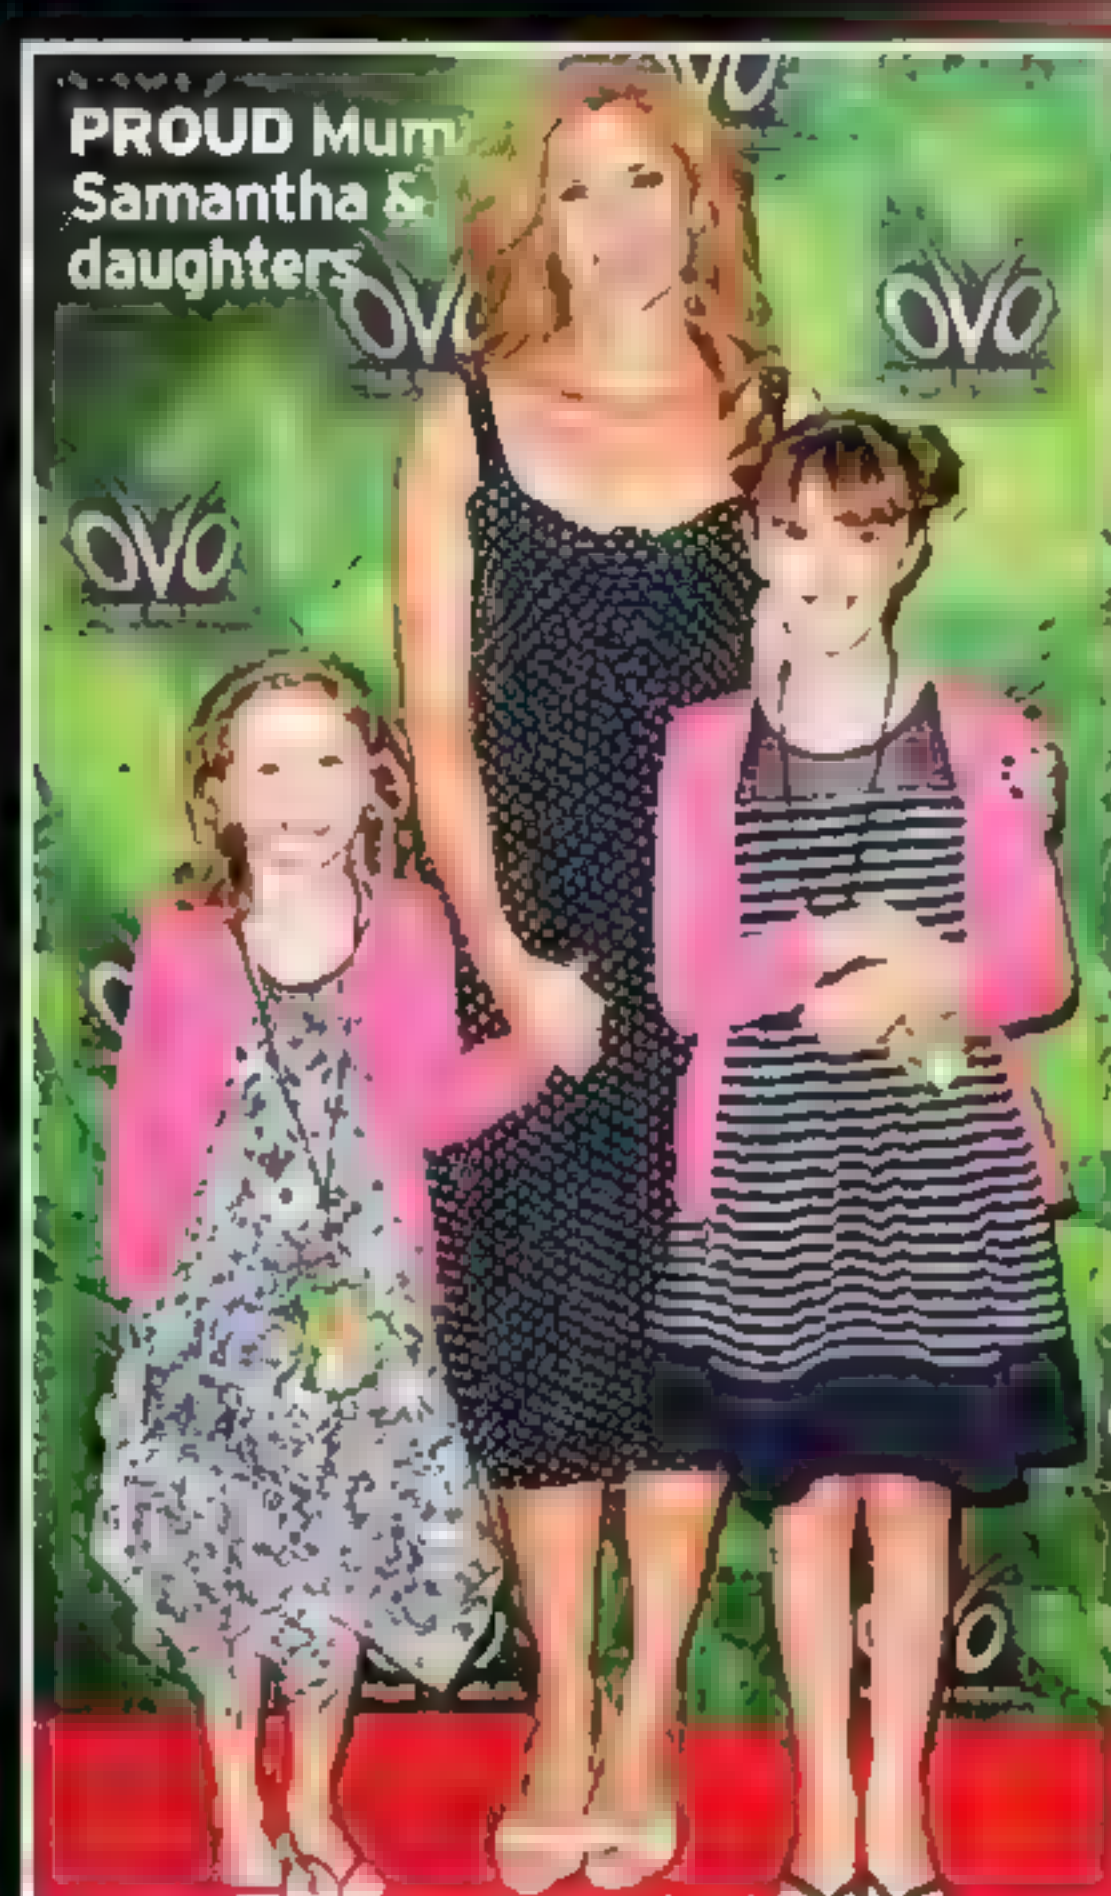

"It's all about belief, if you believe something will happen you can manifest it by bringing your belief and putting it out there, and letting it go into the universe. I believe in being positive in everything I do and passing those thoughts to others."

She is now hoping to work her magic to raise £100,000 for a hospice in Lancashire.

She is helping Pendleside Hospice in their attempt to break the Guinness World Record for the largest gathering of people dressed as witches at an event taking place on Saturday.

At their Pendleside Witch Festival, the hospice hopes to gather a minimum of 2,022 spellcasters, breaking the record of 1,607 held by the residents of the town of Sort in Catalonia, Spain. The hospice contacted Samantha earlier this year as

People interested in taking part in the record attempt can sign up online, and ask loved ones to sponsor them. They will be given a witch's hat to wear for the count at 3pm on Saturday at Barrowford Park, Pendle. The 10 Pendle "witches" were hanged in 1612 after they were charged with killing people using sorcery.

Samantha says: "They were midwives or women who used herbal and natural remedies. They became scapegoats, accused of casting spells on individuals and blamed for everything that went wrong, from landowners' crops failing to people dying in unusual circumstances."

Samantha is now working on the third book in her Rosemary trilogy with

LIFE live it well

Is the secret to happiness child's play?

From building Lego to getting creative with paints, psychotherapist Joanna Fortune believes just 15 minutes of playtime each day will cut stress, boost mood and help you think positively

Try this simple exercise. Think back to your childhood and find a memory of you at your most joyful. What were you doing in that moment?

Chances are you were playing. As children we spend our days in play, be it imaginative, creative or some kind of sport.

But as we reach adulthood, this stops and playtime is replaced by work, life admin, housework and other mundane things.

In short, playtime is over. Yes, our busy lives can leave us time poor.

Running from one urgent task to another, we feel we don't have time to be playful.

But it doesn't have to be this way.

Play, whether you're two or 52, creates moments of joy, which in turn boosts a positive mindset and outlook on life. It builds creativity, emotional resilience, improves self-esteem, and shows us that making mistakes doesn't matter – it's just part of the game.

What's more, taking time out of your day to play will banish stress, as focusing your mind on fun helps to reduce tension.

And just 15 minutes of play a day is all it takes.

15-MINUTE PLAY MAKERS Activity jar

Find a jar and write lots of different activity ideas on coloured notepaper. Fold these up to put inside the jar. You can add to them at any time.

When stuck for inspiration, simply reach into your jar, pull out a random activity and do it, whatever it might be. Some ideas include: putting a song on your headphones and dancing and singing along, doing a jigsaw puzzle, or heading outside to spin around or skip.

Create something

Keep some playdough or Lego in a desk drawer or your bag, and use it to build or sculpt something. Using your hands to create will ground you in the present moment and can be a lot of fun.

To make one coloured ball of playdough takes just 10 minutes, and is an enjoyable activity in itself.

Simply combine 8tbsp plain flour, 2tbsp table salt, 60ml warm water, 1tbsp vegetable oil, and the food colouring of your choice.

Mix it together until it forms a soft dough. It will keep in a box for up to three months.

The street-shopping game

When walking down the street, look around. Imagine you can choose one thing to buy that you would love to own (you have a limitless budget). Think about why you've chosen this piece and where you would put it in your home.

It could be a chair in a cafe, a neon sign above a shop, or a dog you spot wandering by.

A sketch a day

Get a pad or a notebook and draw something every day. It doesn't matter what it is or how it looks, but have a daily burst of creativity.

Colour your feelings

Start by deciding what colour each feeling is. See each one as a shape, with different sizes and textures.

Now when you have a grey blobby day, a small purple triangle type of day or a blue spiky day, only you know what it means, and you can draw it in your notebook.

Map it out

Take a page and, holding a pencil in your dominant hand, close your eyes and move the pencil around it to make the outline of a map.

For 15 minutes each day, add something to your map (houses, transport, recreational aspects, people, infrastructure, environmental features) to create your perfect world/community.

Paint stones

Next time you are out for a walk gather up small smooth stones (shells, too, if you live near a beach). Paint one at play time. Keep your work or write messages of kindness and compliments on the back and leave them in random places for others to discover and enjoy.

■ Extracted by Hannah Britt from Why We Play: How to Find Joy and Meaning in Everyday Life by Joanna Fortune (Thread, £8.99).

MAKING TIME FOR PLAY

Just 15 minutes is enough time for our nervous system to calm down, and it is also enough time for us to enjoy the many benefits of play. And practice makes perfect.

Get into the habit of creating space for play by setting aside a specific time each day – set your alarm so you don't forget.

Shades of autumn

BY EMMA JOHNSON

We have already seen leaves falling early from the trees, after one of the hottest summers on record brought on a so-called "false autumn".

But before we know it, real autumn will be here and the ground will be a blanket of gold, rust, amber and olive.

And as sad as it is to say goodbye to summer, the seasonal leaf fall is a beautiful sight to behold.

At this time of year these shades also work well in our wardrobes. As the days darken we can lift our spirits with richly hued buys.

Try a russet knitted dress, a ditsy-printed smock in burned orange, saffron and sienna, or get ahead of the new season trends with a sage maxi skirt.

Wear with bare legs now, and tights and boots when temperatures plummet.

DEAR COLEEN

Confused because I find female porn a massive turn-on

Dear Coleen

I'm a woman in my late 30s, I'm married to a great guy and we have one child.

For the past few months, I've been going through this phase of watching porn online.

It's pretty light and it's not couples, just women on their own and mostly OnlyFans sites.

I have two issues - I've always been straight, I've never had a lesbian relationship, and in my life generally, I don't fancy women at all. However, watching women turns me on and gets me off. Is this normal?

It was my little secret until my husband saw my browsing history and asked me about it. He wasn't angry, just surprised and he even laughed, which made me feel even more embarrassed and pretty angry. And that's my second issue.

I've refused to have sex with him because of how he's been, which he isn't happy about.

He says I'm making too much of it and that he finds it sexy that I get turned on by women, but I just feel so embarrassed by the whole thing.

I've never even pleasured myself in front of him. What do you think - am I oversexed or sexually confused?

Coleen says

Well, I don't think you are either of those things and you don't need to find a label to put on yourself.

I think lots of straight women do get turned on by watching other women - it's like fantasising about yourself.

I also think you're making too much of your husband's reaction, which I don't think was bad. Yes, he was surprised because he didn't know about that part of you because you've kept it hidden.

And I don't think he was laughing at you or making fun of you, but might have been using humour to bring it up in a light-hearted way or was just like, "Whoa, I never knew this about you!"

He might even be turned on by the idea himself. So, I think you're probably worrying too much and overthinking it, but if his reaction embarrassed you and you don't know how to handle it, then be honest with him about that.

Alternatively, own it and brazen it out by saying something like: "Yes, it really does turn me on actually".

But don't feel ashamed and start questioning who you are as a person.

It might end up being something you watch together, who knows?

He says I'm making too much of it and he finds it sexy

COLEEN'S WORDS OF WISDOM

Are you a worrier? Maybe you worry about things that haven't happened yet or may never happen - I'm guilty of that! Stop worrying about stuff that's out of your control and focus positively on the things you can change.

YOUR DAILY Mirror COMMUNITY CORNER

Let's do this together

Edited by SIOBHAN McNALLY

I've been Kallaxed this week - the flat-pack equivalent of biting off more than you can chew and the feeling of being jinxed.

As I laid the cardboard boxes containing The Dark Lord's new IKEA shelves on her bedroom floor, I suspected I might have got my measurements wrong.

She sat slumped on her bed, scrolling through TikTok on her phone, having just got back from school.

"These look much bigger than the shelves we saw in the store," I said, worried that there wasn't enough floor space to build them flat, let alone hoist them up on to the wall.

She grunted, having gone into her usual phone-daze, and made absolutely no effort to assist me in putting her shelves together.

Irritated, I barked at her: "If you're not going to help, can't you do something useful - like read. Can you still read? What are you reading in your English class?"

I'm not sure what I expected, but it wasn't her reply. "The Crucible," she said, only half tuned in.

"You mean the Arthur Miller play about witches in Salem?" I asked, surprised.

There's been a lot of undermining English lessons at school by intellectually-void politicians lately, and news that some universities won't even be offering English degrees is shocking for a country that produced Shakespeare - and Pam Ayres.

But to hear that a bunch of spotty Year 9s are also learning a classic piece of American literature made me inexplicably glad.

Having laid out all my screws and dowels on the carpet for counting before assembly, it was at this precise moment the dog decided to assist by having a snooze right in the middle of it all.

After 10 minutes of swearing and blaming bloody IKEA for the missing parts, I lifted him up and found the offending items. Just as a little paw came out from under the bed and Dan Dan decided "bat the screw" was more fun than getting wet outside in the rain.

"This really isn't helping, you two," I sighed, putting them out of the bedroom. Then I remembered an old bit of gossip. "Did you know the playwright Miller was married to Marilyn Monroe?" She removed her earphones for once. "No I didn't - that's really quite interesting, mum."

Now I had an audience, I continued. "Yeah and he wrote The Crucible as a parable for the McCarthy witch hunts in the 1950s."

"OK, that's now boring," she replied, putting her earphones back in.

I finally begged TDL: "I'm really going to need your help now," and she reluctantly got up off her bed to hold planks of wood together as I huffed and puffed with the tiny Allen key.

It then took some careful lifting and levering - and TDL being very bossy - but we finally got the tower block of shelves up against the wall.

Although to hear her later on the phone to mates, you'd think she had constructed the pyramids all by herself.

As you can see from my DIY snap, there's still plenty of empty spaces to fill with all her teen junk. And yes, those are fake plants - nothing living can survive in TDL's bedroom for long.

Please note, if you send us photos of your grandchildren, we'll also need permission of one of their parents to print them... Thanks!

Yours, Siobhan

MY AMAZING ROYAL ARTWORK

This dazzling pearly Queen was created using hundreds of buttons and costume jewellery gems by a craft group of care-home residents for the Platinum Jubilee.

Now a teaching assistant, Laena Ashman-Moore is proud of the button art she created with the group at her last job in Bromley, South East London.

Leana says: "I worked as an activities assistant with the care home residents. It was a joint effort to source buttons, old jewellery, paper, card and plenty of hot glue to create this unique portrait of Her Majesty for the Jubilee party."

"And now it makes a very fine lasting memento of our late sovereign."

Has the passing of Her Majesty moved you to take up your pen or paintbrush? Send your royal tributes to siobhan.mcnally@mirror.co.uk and please include a selfie, age and location, and tell us what the late Queen meant to you.

Have little green Martians finally arrived? Or have we discovered the green twin to yesterday's nosy Scouse tomato?

Alien life has been found in Golcar, Huddersfield, where the Ogdens have a new species lurking among their tomatoes.

Owner Roy admits: "It's my wife Maggie who has the green fingers. She's grown various plants and vegetables in our garden, although this is the first one with an identity crisis!"

Reader's FUNsnap

In anticipation of getting a car seat for her granddaughter Alice, Sandy Thomson ordered a safety mirror from a well-known online shopping site.

Sandy, who lives in Dingwall, Ross-shire, says, "The product was made in China and was supposed to come with a free 'baby on board' sticker."

"The mirror is fine, but as you can see, the message seems to have suffered a little in translation."

SILLY PET SELFIE

"My three-year-old border collie, Boots, thinks she's human," says Harry Lindop from Stoke-on-Trent, Staffs.

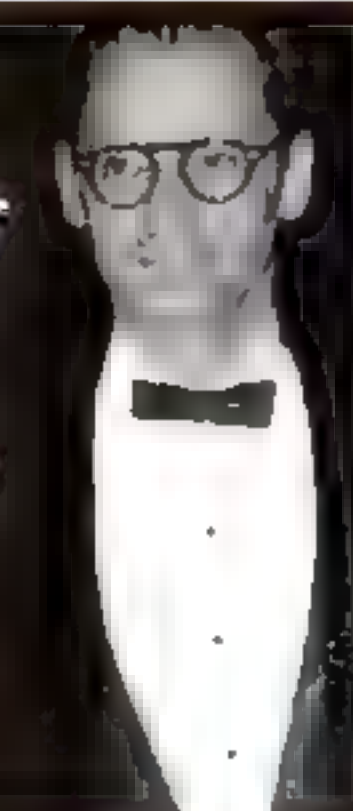

"She insists on shaking your hand, sleeps with her four legs in the air, and rather than rounding up sheep - she rounds up my other two dogs!"

EMMERDALE
ITV, 7.30pm

Charity is gearing up for her trip away while Mackenzie answers a call, demanding that the person on the other end leave him alone.

Leyla and Liam have couple's therapy, and while both of them use it as an opportunity to really open up, Liam is left feeling absolutely drained.

Rishi and Bernice agree to have lunch together but Bernice is left completely mortified after Rishi bails, fearing she may be too intense for him.

EASTENDERS
BBC1, 7.30pm

It's the morning after the night before as Dotty begins the walk of shame.

But Bernie's on to her and immediately urges her to be honest with Vinny.

Bernie is also quick to impart similar advice. So following their words of wisdom (or so she thinks), she comes clean and tells Vinny what's happened.

Needless to say he doesn't take it too well, and Finlay intervening just makes things even worse.

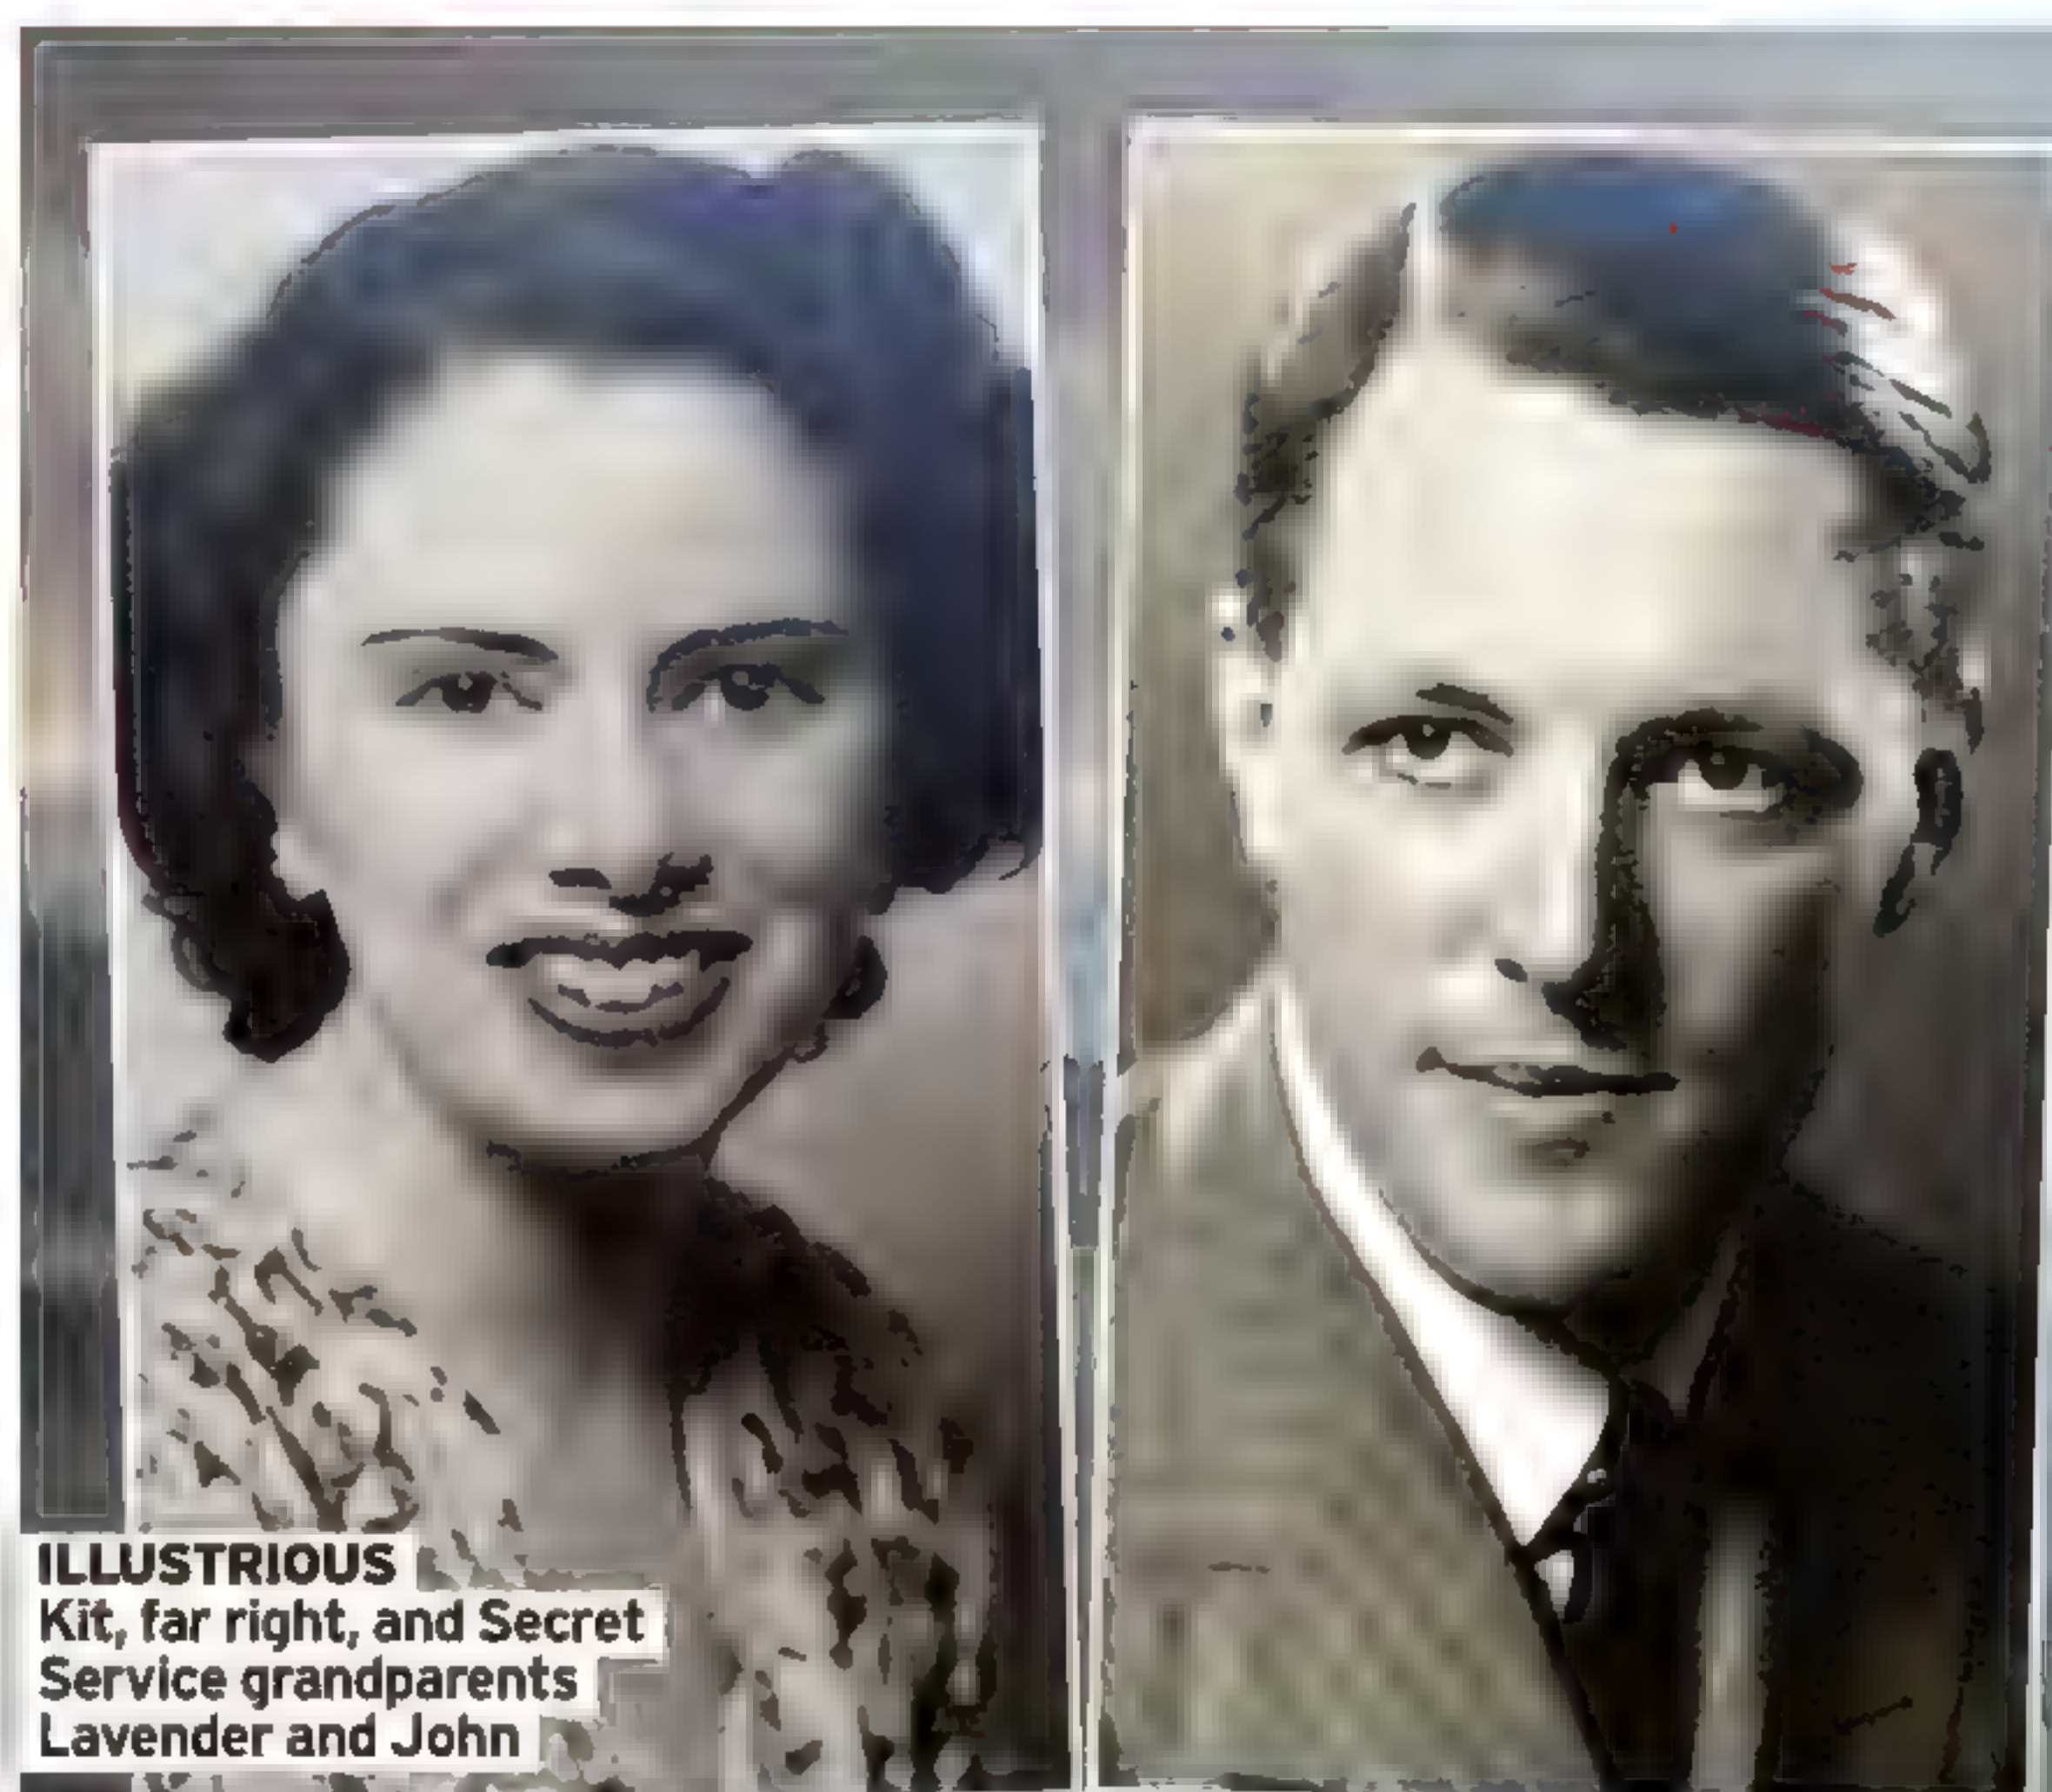

Elsewhere, Frankie pulls Denzel and Nugget up on their behaviour.

CORONATION STREET
ITV, 9pm

Toyah's a blabbering bag of nerves as she heads to court to face the jury.

Leanne pleads with her not to say anything she'll regret and let the solicitor do the talking. But it's not looking good when Saira delivers a damning testimony against her.

Meanwhile, Zeedan and Stu prepare for Sean's epic birthday while Kelly plans the engagement party to end all parties with her inheritance cash.

ILLUSTRIOUS Kit, far right, and Secret Service grandparents Lavender and John

A spy in the family

MY GRANDPARENTS' WAR
Channel 4, 9pm

ANCESTRY shows are always a winning formula - perhaps even more so when huge A-list names are involved.

After series one deep-dived into the history of Hollywood stars like Kristin Scott Thomas, series two continues with an equally stellar bunch.

Tonight it's the turn of Game Of Thrones star Kit Harington to unravel a few family secrets. He's famed for playing a medieval warrior and has been cast as a spy but, it appears, Kit's illustrious career isn't half as exciting as the lives of some of his relatives.

On his dad's side of the family, his grandparents John and Lavender (Lally) both worked for the British Secret Service in crucial roles.

Historians reveal John was not only a spy, but also a spy-catcher, working for both MI5 and MI6.

And it just gets better. After being recruited by Britain's Naval Intelligence Division, John was sent to the Caribbean to keep a watchful eye on none other than the former King of England, Edward VIII.

Edward, then the Duke of Windsor, had been appointed Governor of the Bahamas in 1940 after abdicating the throne four years earlier so he would be free to marry the American socialite Wallis Simpson.

However, after the pair became known Nazi sympathisers it was deemed too great a risk to have them in Britain, so they were kept at arms' length abroad.

Through John's top secret work, it is almost certain he would have met another famous Naval Intelligence Division spy - none other than Ian Fleming who wrote James Bond.

Relishing the news, Kit jokes: "In a really roundabout way [John] Harington might have inspired Bond."

Kit's equally overjoyed when a historian tells him: "Your grandfather was this kind of James Bond character."

As if Kit needs any more kudos, maybe he's now at the front of the queue for the next 007 casting...

SAVING LIVES AT SEA
BBC2, 8pm

When 13-year-old Joe was swept up by a deadly rip while body-boarding off the picture-perfect North Cornwall coast, his desperate mum Sarah feared her worst nightmare had come true.

For 15 minutes she waited helplessly on the beach to hear whether her son had been saved - her fear he had drowned growing greater with every passing second.

But thanks to brothers Jake and Jordan, who made a high-speed dash to Trevone Bay to drag a listless Joe into their boat, he survived. The siblings, and their parents, are part of a 5,000-strong army of ordinary people from across the UK who volunteer for the Royal National Lifeboat Institution. And thank heavens for their dedication.

This brilliant documentary - brought to life with dramatic body-cam footage from volunteers who captured the rescues - is a stark reminder of how quickly the sea can claim lives, and the bravery and determination of RNLI crew.

Calm one second, and chaos the next, every rescue they embark on is a race against time.

ALL CREATURES GREAT AND SMALL

Channel 5, 9pm

Channel 5 has a total gem in its TV treasure trove with this heart-warming 1930s' Yorkshire Dales drama.

The third series, adapted from the memories by vet James Herriot, picks up on the morning of James (Nicholas Ralph) and Helen's (Rachel Shenton) wedding day.

While the church bells are chiming, ever-dutiful James looks preoccupied - tending to an injured cow - and Helen's in her wellies thinking about chickens. "You know, it is the tradition that the groom arrives before the bride," sighs the disgruntled vicar in their idyllic church.

There's another spanner in the works too - one that nearly gives best man Tristan (Callum Woodhouse) a heart attack.

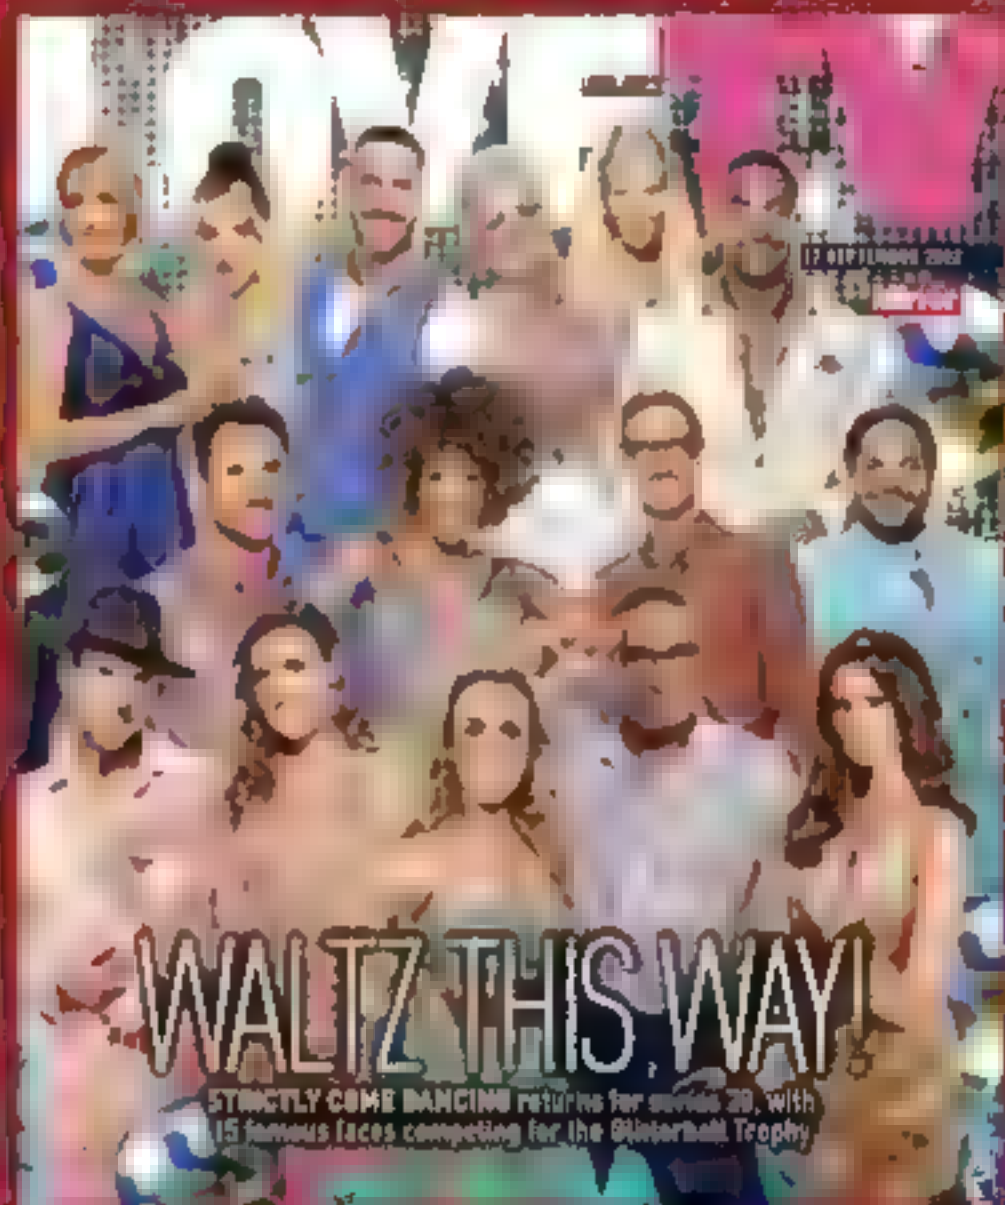

Everything comes together rather beautifully in the end - before you know it you may even be feeling a bit emotional for the newlyweds.

But now it's 1939, and war is looming, so James is also questioning whether his heart lies in the Dales or on a battlefield...

It's a phrase we often hear banded about these days. But who truly deserves the title of National Treasure? From wildlife presenters (we can all think of one in particular) to much loved comedians, actors, sports stars and even royalty and politicians, who are really our national treasures? Draw up a list of your top 10 and send it to the address on this page or features@mirror.co.uk

Wise choice by retailers

There were widespread retail closures for the funeral of Diana, Princess of Wales, in 1997. Hence, I support the decision for many retail outlets to shut for the funeral of Her Majesty on Monday's bank holiday. Throughout her reign, Her Majesty was noted for her innate sense of diplomacy.

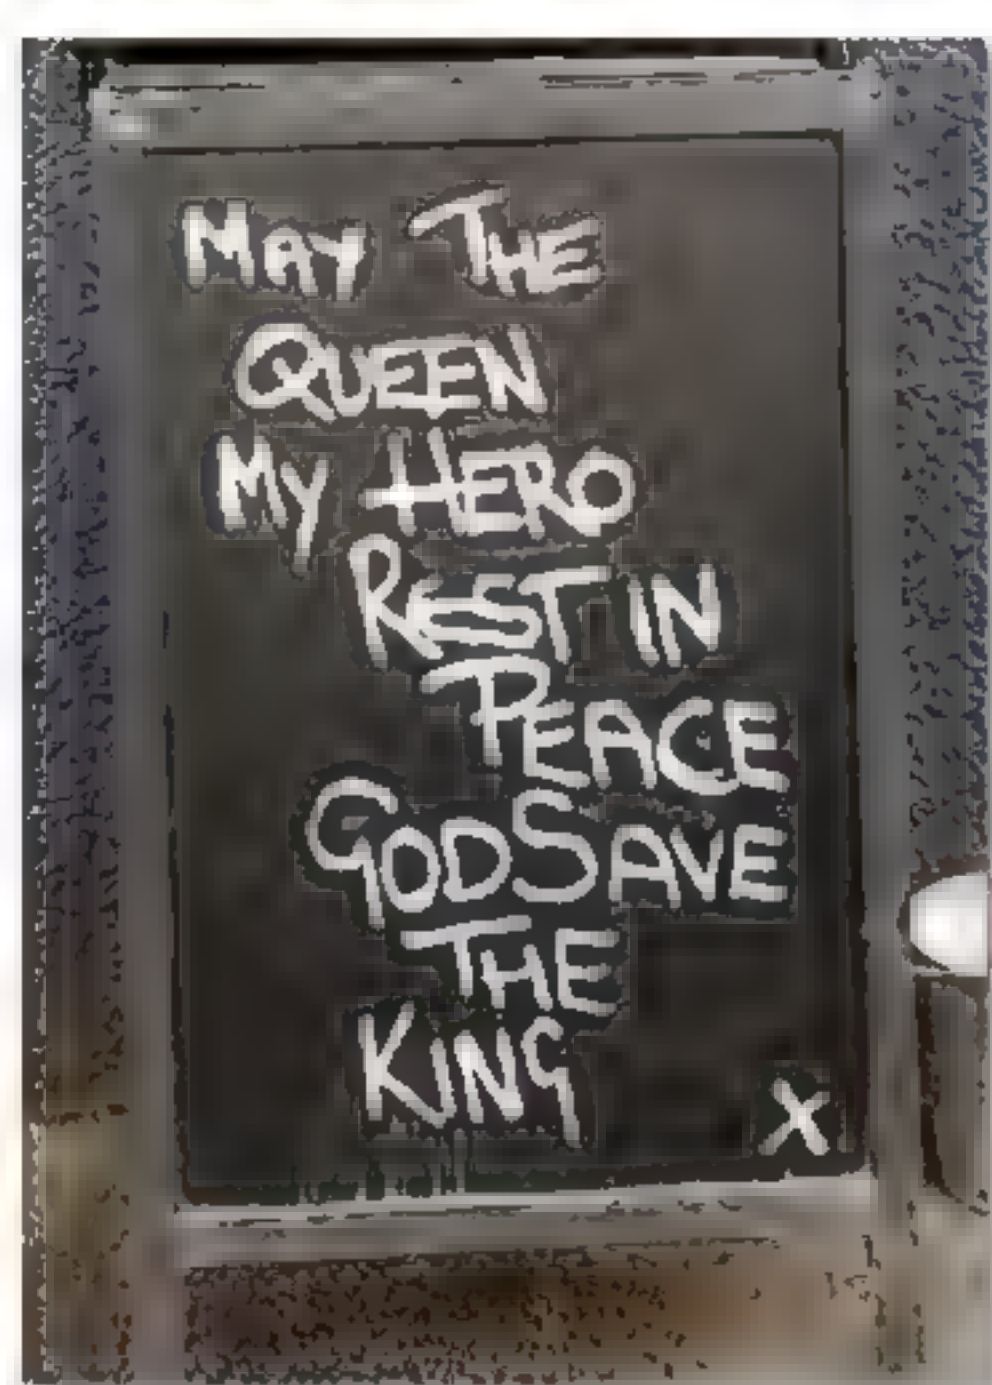

In this spirit, a collective closure by retailers in the UK is good diplomacy. It will give time and space for staff to reflect with their families and communities.

It will also enhance the sense of dignity during the funeral. Retailers will also gain as more goods will be bought before the one-day closure and upon reopening.

John Barstow, Usdaw Executive Council

Tories need to get a grip, fast

WE'VE had a new Prime Minister and a new King in less than a week so these are unsettling, unprecedented times.

The nation is in mourning for our Queen and politics is on hold. But we must not let the Tories take advantage while backs are turned.

Liz Truss has already announced a number of Cabinet appointments that give cause for alarm while households are struggling as bills go through the roof.

When the formalities are over and tributes paid, the people of this country need to make our voices heard loud and clear – enough is enough. We need a general election now to get rid of this Tory Government that is taking us back to the Dark Ages.

Peter Bailey, Gateshead Tyne and Wear

With the death of the Queen, the announcement of a series of ministerial appointments, one of which is Jacob Rees-Mogg as Business and Energy Secretary, must not be forgotten. Surely he must be the worst person in charge of climate and energy?

This is the man who once said "carbon dioxide emissions have risen but the effect on the climate remains much debated". He will argue this because he has his own agenda and interests in the fossil fuel industry.

When the proverbial hits the fan, he won't be around to take the blame – our grandchildren will have to clean up his mess and that of other Tories.

Tony Howard, Salford Gtr Manchester

THE BIG ISSUE

After being in recess following the Queen's death, Parliament is due to break up again next Thursday for three weeks of party conferences. This means from July 22 to October 17, MPs will only have sat for between five and seven "normal" days in total, despite the worst cost-of-living crisis for a generation. You say...

The Queen has died and, of course, that is understandably dominating the news. However, a war still rages in Ukraine, the cost of living is still crippling millions, knife and gun crime is increasingly rife, and the NHS is still struggling.

These and many other pressing issues haven't gone away and are increasingly urgent. I hope the recently installed PM is busy with things other than preparations for the Queen's funeral.

Stefan Badham, Portsmouth

The late Queen was a supreme example of emphasising similarities whereas today's Tory politicians excel only at magnifying differences of opinion. Several times during the Covid pandemic Keir Starmer offered support to Johnson but was rebuffed.

Are we doomed to have nothing but division to look forward to? What a sorry state the new King Charles III finds this country in.

Terry Marriott, Waterlooville, Hants

With present events, it seems little attention is being paid to the PM's new Cabinet. If Therese Coffey is the best Liz Truss can come up with as Health Secretary her judgment is seriously flawed. This is the same woman who voted to repeal the smoking ban.

Call me cynical but you have to wonder if she has been appointed to oversee the destruction of the NHS.

Victor Laidlaw, St Leonards-on-Sea, East Sussex

We have just lost our head of state, a woman from whom politicians, especially the Tories, should have taken lessons in duty and integrity.

I do hope you will continue to keep an eye on Liz Truss and her band of cronies given that attention is focused elsewhere.

Can the Tories be trusted not to slip out a few changes over the coming weeks that they may not want us to notice?

Ron Eason, Andover, Hants

In the space of a week we have had a new Prime Minister and a new head of state, yet the electorate has had no say in the choice of either. And this is supposed to be a democracy fit for the 21st century.

John Lee, St Ives, Cambs

THE BIG QUESTION

Every day we'll be asking your opinion on one of Britain's big talking points. You can have your say and vote at mirror.co.uk

GPs' surgeries around the country are to close on Monday's Bank Holiday for the Queen's state funeral, despite the NHS backlog.

Should GPs close for the Queen's funeral?

YES 22%

NO 78%

No. Not everyone has the option of having the day off, so why should people miss their appointments?
AC

Yes. They close on Bank Holidays anyway so one day won't hurt. It's our Queen – we'll never see anyone like her again.
ANDREA MORGAN

No. Our lovely GP made it clear it's out of his hands and that it was a decision made on their behalf.
BEVERLEY HOLME

No. I worked for the NHS and, Queen's funeral or not, would be at work. People can watch it later. We can't bring the country to a standstill.
PHYLLIS ASHE

No. What's wrong with this country? Have people lost all sense of perspective? Mourn the Queen, by all means, but this is a ludicrous decision.
CONTRARIAN VIEWPOINT

Yes. I agree everything should close, including GPs. It's a once-in-a-lifetime event.
MARIE ELLISON

Does Wales need them?

William and Kate have been made Prince and Princess of Wales. Why, in 21st-century Britain, do we have a Prince and Princess of Wales? Scotland and Northern Ireland manage perfectly fine without having a prince of those countries. Is it not time to end this medieval tradition which was only created as a means of facilitating the conquest of the Welsh? Gilbert Whitehand Chesterfield, Derbys scooter has added oomph

Aprilia 125

APRILIA HARNESSSES GRUNT OF 15 HORSES

BY FRASER ADDECOTT

Scooters have come a long way since the likes of the Vespa and the best-selling model, the Honda Cub.

The latter, incidentally, has sold well over 100 million units since its inception in 1958 and is still going strong.

The range of styles of scooter has expanded in recent years with everything from large-capacity "super-scooters" to off-road models like Honda's X-ADV.

Figures from the Motorcycle Industry Association show that of the 8,800 total powered two-wheelers sold last month, 2,800 were scooters.

Entering the fray is this 125 from Aprilia, the SR GT. The Italian firm calls it an "urban adventure" bike and it certainly has a unique look. The front end looks more like a sports bike, with aggressive lines, Angry Birds twin LED headlights and false aero wings on the sides.

From the side, the SR GT is compact and sporty, but with some off road-style features such as rugged footboards.

On board, the ride position is roomy with an active stance and wide bars to complement the sporty looks.

There's a good-sized white-on-black LCD dash with plenty of info and a digital speedo and rev counter.

Start up and the engine immediately sounds classy – much quieter than some 125s.

The single-cylinder liquid-cooled engine is also a really excellent unit. It produces maximum power of 15bhp and 9ft lb of torque, impressive stuff for a bike of this size.

Most 125s reach around 12bhp, so the Aprilia is one of the quickest on the market.

It also features a "start-and-stop" system, which replaces a traditional starter with a brushless electrical device attached to the crank. It's lighter, quieter and more reliable, plus it reduces consumption.

The handling on the SR GT is a real joy. Weighing just 144kg (with a full tank) and with a 14in front and 13in rear wheel, 175mm ground clearance and Showa USD forks and twin rear shocks, leaning into the bends is more akin to riding a motorbike. The linked braking system, with 260mm wavy front disc, is more than powerful enough to bring you to a sharp stop too.

The long-travel suspension and dual-purpose Michelin tyres mean you can even take the Aprilia on to your local green lane, where it performs well. A 25-litre under-seat compartment will take a full-face helmet and there is a 33-litre aluminium top box.

Overall, an excellent performer at a reasonable price.

VW's ID.5 takes a turn for the worse

DRIVING PLEASURE IS WRECKED BY THE SUV'S AWFUL STEERING

Very few electric cars are actually fun to drive. Usually they're too heavy with dulled responses, though BMW's i4 and Renault's Megane E-Tech hatchback are notable exceptions.

This will no doubt change in the future as batteries are made lighter and more efficient but, for now, many new EVs are pretty unrewarding behind the wheel.

However, few are as poor as the new Volkswagen ID.5 we're testing this week.

Its unladen weight is 2,117kg and that's about par for course for an electric SUV of these dimensions. But what really makes this car poor to drive is its steering which is overly stiff and has very little feel.

In fact, it is possibly the worst I've experienced in a vehicle since the power steering belt snapped in my old Chevrolet pick-up truck.

The ID.5 is a coupe version of the ID.4 SUV. There's a high-performance version of the car called the GTX which has two electric motors with a combined power output of 295bhp. It has a top speed of 114mph and does 0-62mph in 6.3sec.

The regular ID.5, which we're

MAKING THE TRANSITION

You're looking at the new Ford E-Transit that will go on sale in autumn 2023.

The van will be designed from the ground up to be electric (unlike the current Transits) and will have a range of up to 236 miles and 125kW rapid charging. The van will have a payload of 1,100kg and offer a class-leading towing capacity of two tons.

There's no word on price yet, of course, or about the different body styles that will be available.

ANIMAL INSTINCT

BMW and Mini will offer fully vegan interiors for the first time from 2023.

Even the cars' steering wheels will be wrapped in a non-animal material. Apparently it will feel like leather and will look like it as well, apart from a slightly different grain pattern.

In other areas, new types of materials and substances will replace those used today so that the total content of future cars derived from animals will be no more than 1%.

with COLIN GOODWIN

Your Parking Space, the company that facilitates households renting out driveway space, has revealed that those who have an EV charging point on their driveway are making on average £1,020 a year. Sounds interesting but surely the most likely time that people are going to want to charge their EV is at night when the electricity is at its cheapest? Which is exactly the same time the driveway owner will want to charge his or her own car.

KOP FOR THIS

The Kop Hill Climb festival is a charming event I've been to in the past. It takes place over the weekend of September 24-25 up a hill road near Princes Risborough in Buckinghamshire.

The event will feature vehicles from the early 1900s up to the present day with two and four wheels. There will be special displays and runs up the hill by Austin 7s (the small car that put many families behind the wheel when it was launched in 1922 at a price of £165), a parade of Ferraris and also Lotus.

There'll also be a soapbox race for the youngsters to enjoy and runs up the hill by a Ferrari SF90 and McLaren Speedtail.

For details, go to kophillclimb.org.uk

Nissan has announced details of its new X-Trail SUV which will be the fourth generation of the popular car. It'll also be the first X-Trail to be offered with an electric powertrain.

That version will feature a twin motor arrangement, each one driving an axle. Nissan calls this all-wheel drive system e-4ORCE. Under the X-Trail's bonnet will be a 1.5-litre variable compression ratio petrol engine that produces 204PS.

This engine is only put to work generating power for the electric motors and is never connected to the road wheels.

Available with five or seven seats, the latest Nissan X-Trail range will start from £32,030, with deliveries expected from next month.

ELECTRIFYING

Williams Advanced Engineering, the applied engineering arm of the F1 team, has produced an electric-vehicle platform that could be used by outside companies to produce their own hypercars.

Called the EVR, in top-spec form it will have four electric motors and produce in excess of 2,200bhp. That ridiculous amount of horsepower could propel a car to 248mph and from 0-62mph in 1.9sec.

Austrian hypercar maker Deus has already signed up for 99 EVR platforms for its Vayanne hypercar.

Less powerful versions of the EVR with only two motors will also be available.

But don't expect even that version to ever be used on a sports car that normal people might be able to afford because apparently the sums would never work out.

our test drive are that it will achieve 300 miles on a charge if you're careful.

Cars with the lower output motor are called Performance and those with the 204PS motor Pro Performance.

There are three trim levels running through Style, Tech and Max. Ours is in Tech trim which means a price without options of £54,640 – so not cheap.

When you bear that in mind, the ID.5's interior trim is rather disappointing. I'm not one of those critics who's fixated by plastic hardness and scratchy surfaces, but it has to be said that some of the materials used on the dashboard and door cards do not look or feel as though they belong on a car at this price point.

If you have read any of our previous tests of recent Volkswagen Group cars you would know we are less than impressed by the infotainment systems they offer.

The current version, as used on this car, has far too many touch sensitive buttons, not enough analogue controls and requires the driver to spend too

Indications are the car will achieve 300 miles on a charge if you're careful much time within the screen to control simple functions.

If you're a regular reader you'll have heard me banging on about it before but I'll stop criticising VW's current system when it's replaced with something more usable.

Despite the sloping rear bodywork that gives the car its coupe-like tail, the ID.5 is not short on headroom for passengers in the back. There's plenty of leg and shoulder room, too.

Surprisingly, the boot is actually bigger than the luggage space in the ID.4 with 549 litres against the boxier ID.4's 543 litres. That sloping roof does have some effect though because the capacity with the seats down is 1,561 litres, which is a reduction of 95 litres on the other car.

The ID.5 feels as though it has a stiffer ride than the ID.4 and I don't remember that car having such a compromised steering feel, either.

Unless you're grabbed by the ID.5's more curvaceous rear-end styling then I don't see a reason for choosing one over the cheaper and better ID.4.

SWITCHED ON JEEPS

US manufacturer Jeep has announced that 100% of the vehicles it sells in Europe by 2030 will be electric.

Jeep's first all-electric SUV will be the Avenger, pictured, and makes its debut at the Paris Motor Show in a month's time.

This car will be followed by three other BEVs that will include the Wagoneer and an all-new model called the Recon that will go on sale in the US early next year and in Europe later.

It'll be interesting to see whether Jeep develops a Wrangler, its most iconic and rugged model, with an electric powertrain.

ENGINE OPTIONS

Cupra is adding a couple of new engines to the Leon range, aligning it with the current Formentor models.

The Leon five-door hatchback and estate will be available with a 1.5-litre TSI unit with an output of 150PS, and also a 2.0-litre TSI motor with 190PS.

The smaller engine will be available with a manual gearbox as well as a DSG automatic, whereas the bigger engine will only get the automatic gearbox.

PHILLIPSGreat

advice at mirror.co.uk/jobsMORE and more people aged 50 to 64 are struggling to find work since the pandemic.

Government statistics reveal there are around 200,000 fewer people working in this pre-retirement age bracket than before Covid-19 hit.

According to charity Centre for Ageing Better (ageing-better.org.uk), over 50s are finding it the hardest to break back into the labour market, often meaning they face long-term unemployment leading up to state pension age.

Above all else, say experts, you must not give up hope of finding a job.

"The recruitment market remains very robust, with the number of employers expecting to increase staffing levels exceeding pre-pandemic levels," says Ryan Bridgman from Jobrapido.

"Filling these vacancies still remains a significant challenge for many employers.

"This has resulted in organisations offering benefits such as flexible working, which may have a significant impact on the ability of older workers to gain access to employment.

"Additionally, increasing numbers of employers are embracing the skills and experience older workers can bring and we see significant numbers of older workers in professions such as teaching, retail, care and driving instruction to name just a few options."

The secret, he says, is to be as flexible as possible and think outside the box.

Here are some top tips on how to get back to work:

Become a freelancer

One in seven people is now thinking about freelancing and many are already in the early stages of starting up their activities as a consultant.

Statistics from the Office for National Statistics reveal that workers over the age of 50 make up nearly half the entire UK self-employed population.

Ryan says: "On the web there are also many opportunities for freelancers which can better offer the chance to build your own business and at the same time be able to have the work-life balance you need."

Apprenticeships

There has been a big drive to encourage more apprenticeships in the UK.

Yet perception lags behind reality about the criteria needed and age of apprentices.

They are not solely for people aged from 16 to 21.

The reality is apprenticeships are not age restricted.

They provide the opportunity to retrain, acquire new skills and lay the right foundation to build an entirely new career.

For more information, check out apprenticeships.gov.uk.

We found 13,180 opportunities from retail and admin assistants to electricians and chefs.

Change your mindset

We live in an era where a job is no longer a job for life.

Many of us can expect to have at least two or even three different careers in our working lives.

Our grandparents and great-grandparents may have "stuck it out" in one company and accepted their workplace fate but, on the whole, the 21st-century UK employee can shop around for the role they want.

We are also lucky to live in an era in which technology can support us in achieving our goals.

We have the chance to move sideways, or move up, our career trajectory with our existing experience.

And we can cast the net further and faster thanks to online searches.

Visit the Open University at open.ac.uk (student loans and grants are available), notgoingtouni.co.uk, which lists apprenticeships and other training ideas, and nationalcareers.service.gov.uk which could give you some ideas about what you might like to do.

U-turn plea on business rates

CALLS TO AXE RISE AMID ENERGY CRISIS

BUSINESSES risk being hit with a near £2.7billion rate hike - as the Government comes under pressure to confirm what help it is giving firms with soaring energy bills.

Prime Minister Liz Truss and Chancellor Kwasi Kwarteng are being urged to use an emergency Budget, expected next week, to scrap a rise in the business rates tax next April.

As it stands, the increase would be pegged to September's headline rate of inflation.

The Consumer Price Index's measure of inflation was 9.9% last month, the Office for National Statistics confirmed yesterday.

If repeated in September, it would see rates for shops, pubs, restaurants, factories and offices in England jump by £2.66bn, according to the real-estate adviser Altus Group. Business rates are devolved in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Firms are still awaiting details of the energy bills support promised by Ms Truss last week. She announced a price freeze for millions of households and "equivalent" help for businesses too.

But this has left bosses in the dark about how they get it.

While the death of the Queen is believed to have added to the delay, reports say a scheme may not be ready until November.

"It is not worked through yet," a Government official told the FT.

Emma McClarkin, chief of the British Beer and Pub Association, said: "Pubs and brewers will not be able to wait days, let alone months. Many are deciding now if they will have to close this winter."

DUNELM SALES TOP £1.5BN

The family behind homeware chain Dunelm have netted another £35million after the retailer revealed record annual profits.

Bill and Jean Adderley started out selling ready-made curtains on a market stall in Leicester in 1979. The family hold a near 43% stake in the business which now has 175 stores and 10,000 staff. Profits for the year to July leapt 32.4% to £209m, on sales up 16.2% to £1.55billion with the retailer confirming a 40p ordinary dividend, including a 26p final dividend.

The chain said customers were responding to soaring energy bills by snapping up extra duvets, indoor airers and onesies.

>> The Spanish owner of fashion giant Zara plans to hike prices again this autumn as it tries to offset soaring costs. It comes despite Inditex yesterday revealing that half-year profits jumped 41% to over £1.5billion.

WORLD HEAVYWEIGHT TITLE FIGHT
PRINCIPALITY STADIUM, CARDIFF, DEC 3

ROW OR NEVER

Joshua accepted lesser terms for clash because he feared chance to fight Fury could have disappeared

BY DAVID ANDERSON
@MirrorAnderson

ANTHONY JOSHUA finally accepted Tyson Fury's offer to fight on December 3 because he feared he may not get another chance.

Promoter Eddie Hearn was unhappy with the terms tabled by the WBC heavyweight king, but says Joshua agreed as he felt it was now or never.

The pair will clash in British boxing's biggest fight, probably at Cardiff's Principality Stadium, with a 60-40 purse split in Fury's favour, and Hearn says Joshua is putting up with being treated as "the B-side".

"I didn't expect the next fight to be Tyson Fury, but AJ is the boss," said the Matchroom chief.

"He's the guy who makes the decisions, and he said, 'I may never get the chance again because he fights Usyk, he retires, etc. If it's here, I accept'."

"This is the fight AJ's wanted for so long and he wasn't prepared to wait any longer. He felt this could be his only opportunity to get the fight with Tyson Fury. Everybody asks me about this fight all the time and he's continuously fought all challengers.

"He's continuously fought everybody people have wanted him to fight and this is another example of that.

"I think Mr Fury has a great deal, but this one wasn't about the money for AJ.

This was about the challenge and we accept the challenge.

"We weren't allowed to negotiate. In all deals you negotiate, but we were told unequivocally no movement, take it or leave it.

"We were treated like the B-side going into the fight. Whether that was right or wrong, it doesn't really matter because it came down to AJ wanting the fight."

Hearn still has doubts as Joshua signed to fight in Saudi Arabia last summer for the undisputed title, only for Fury to pull out when told to fight Deontay Wilder a third time.

He and Joshua are waiting to receive the fight contract from Fury's co-promoters Frank and George Warren and says it will be the Gypsy King's fault if it falls through now.

"We signed the contract for the Fury fight to take place in Saudi Arabia," added Hearn.

"That fight was agreed, signed and unfortunately the arbitration ruling meant that fight could not take place.

"We have to receive a contract now, but if they really want the fight, the fight will get made. AJ's all in for the fight.

"I always have my doubts when it comes to Tyson Fury, but everything I hear from George Warren, I believe."

Hearn plans to rearrange Leigh Wood's WBA featherweight title defence against Mauricio Lara after the Nottingham fighter had to pull out of their September 24 fight with a torn bicep.

CRICKET ENGLAND TEST TEAM

Baz has banished Ollie fear

BY DEAN WILSON

OLLIE POPE has admitted he needed England coach Brendon McCullum to take the weight off his shoulders as he was too desperate to succeed in Test cricket.

Fresh from a series win over South Africa, the No.3 batsman revealed he had put too much pressure on himself to have a decent international career and it was affecting his game.

And at the start of a seismic summer he needed someone of the charisma and character of McCullum to help him realise fear of failure was doing him no favours. It appears to have worked with Pope (above) scoring 456 runs at an average of 38 in the seven matches against New Zealand, India and the Proteas.

"I've tried to stop looking at the bigger picture too much this summer," said the Surrey star, 24.

"I've tried to just focus game by game and enjoy it. I had some good chats with Baz actually and he's been very much telling me to stop fearing getting out in Test cricket.

"It meant something from a guy like him, he's had an amazing career. So he's obviously lived that and lived by that and realises along the way you're going to get a few low scores.

"I think because Test cricket is so important to me I'd do anything to have a great career and play 100 Tests or whatever. I think I was almost putting myself under too much pressure and that fear of getting out was probably getting a bit too much.

"I tried to get rid of that and tried to score my runs. Rather than think, 'If I cut this I might nick it,' I think, 'If I cut it and I nick it then it might go over the slips for four.' That is the mindset change I've tried to go by."

Pope's attention now turns to the final two County Championship matches of the summer for Surrey with his club chasing another title.

He will then look to build on such a promising start at first wicket down for England, with a bumper winter in Pakistan on pitches that should suit batting.

RUGBY UNION THE GALLAGHER PREMIERSHIP

BY ALEX SPINK

WORCESTER were on the brink of having to forfeit Sunday's Premiership game against Exeter after the deadline to pay outstanding debts came and went.

A press release on Tuesday claimed an agreement had been made for the sale of the cash-strapped rugby club - with debts of at least £25million - and that the interested party would produce funds in time to save the fixture.

But yesterday's 5pm

WARRIORS ARE FACING EXETER GAME FORFEIT

deadline passed with no word of a deal or payment of unpaid wages and costs to enable the game at Sixways to go ahead.

Should that remain the case Warriors boss Steve Diamond (right) said: "I don't think, logistically, the game can go on." A club statement last night confirmed Warriors are "still awaiting final sign-off of the heads of term on the agreement of the sale of the club to a buyer."

"We appreciate that the delay is frustrating for our loyal staff, sponsors and supporters."

MAX MALINS has put Saracens' rivals on red alert after revealing he is on a mission to make up for last season.

The England wing is coming off a campaign in which he scored 16 times in 15 appearances to land the Premiership's top try-scorer award.

He bagged four against Wasps, four against Worcester and a hat-trick against Bath as Sarries made the Grand Final on their first year back in the top flight after enforced relegation.

But Malins lost his England place both for the climax of the Six Nations and the Australia tour, and the north London club finished without a trophy for only the second season since 2014.

"It was disappointing," said the Cambridge-born flyer.

"I wanted to be on that tour, representing my country. I wasn't exactly pleased with my performances in the Wales and Ireland games.

"At the club, we got to the Prem final - didn't win that, got to the semi-final of Europe - didn't win that. Many here have won titles, that's what drives us. So our motivation couldn't be higher."

Saracens are the last cab off the rank, having been the odd team out when the Premiership kicked off last week. They are favourites with bookmakers to win their fifth title in nine years.

But an opening game at arch rivals Harlequins, whom they beat in the semi-finals in June, will be one of their toughest tests all season.

"For it to come so early is a treat for the fans, but a massive challenge for us, it being our first competitive game," said Malins. "We know the challenge, know the rivalry, we're expecting a tough game."

Malins is as exciting an outside back as there is in the English game, Sarries boss Mark McCall likening him to All Blacks star Beauden Barrett. But he admits he has yet to show his best at Test level and feels driven to make that step up.

"I'm not sure I've shown what I am about on the international stage yet," said Malins. "I haven't hit my straps playing for England."

"We all put expectation on ourselves. Last year, we got close, but didn't get there."

"We don't talk about that, but it is in the back of our minds. We want to see how far we can take this group, how good we can be. There's room for growth. We know it - we've just got to try to unlock it."

HOW HER MAJESTY LIT UP LONDON

Forget the Mobot and the Lightning Bolt...for many THIS was the defining moment of London 2012

LORD COE ON THE SECRETS BEHIND THE QUEEN'S INCREDIBLE 'SKY DIVE' WITH JAMES BOND

OH, OH HEAVEN

The Queen played her role to perfection alongside 007 in the 2012 Olympic video

BY ALEX SPINK

Athletics correspondent
@alexspinkmirror

FOR many, it remains THE defining image of the London 2012 Olympics.

Not Mo Farah's victory 'Mobot', nor Bradley Wiggins seated on a throne outside Hampton Court Palace, not even Usain Bolt modestly declaring, "I'm now a living legend – bask in my glory".

A nation gasped, then roared its approval as a Union Flag parachute opened and the 'Queen' floated serenely to Earth before moments later walking into the Royal Box.

The sketch – in which Daniel Craig's 007 meets Her Majesty at Buckingham Palace, then 'drops' with her into the Stratford stadium – was watched by a global audience of 900million.

Ten years on, it has more than 61m views on YouTube. "I think that was the iconic moment in any opening ceremony," said London 2012 boss Seb Coe.

"I'm eternally grateful for the fact that the Queen entered into the spirit of it.

"Nobody was quite sure whether she would or whether she would see the humour of it. But she did – and very quickly. I think it set the tone and style for the whole Games, frankly."

Coe and Danny Boyle, artistic director for London's opening ceremony, recalled the glorious episode on BBC 5 Live.

"Danny came into my office some months beforehand and said, 'Look, we've been doing a bit of market research and the two iconic British figures in this order are the Queen and James Bond,'" said Coe.

"I was sort of nodding in agreement, right up to the point that he said, 'Wouldn't it be great if we could get them to jump out of a helicopter together?'"

Boyle suspected they would end up with a 'double' of the Queen arriving on the Tube and was stunned to get word back from the Palace that she was both up for it and wanted a speaking part.

Not only did she deliver her line faultlessly, she kept a straight face – appearing precisely on cue in the Royal Box moments after stuntman Gary Connery had parachuted in wearing an identical dress.

Crucial to the success of the sketch was that news of it did not leak out before the event.

As the ceremony began, it quickly became clear to Coe, seated in among the Royal Family, that it had not.

"There were few people in the organising committee that knew and clearly, amongst the family, even fewer," he said. "I sat next to Prince Charles – now King Charles – and it's difficult to describe the noise he was making as this helicopter appeared on the scene and suddenly he watched his mother walking across the lawn with Daniel Craig.

"The moment the door opened and the two disappeared out of the helicopter, Prince Harry screamed out, 'Go, Granny!'. "But the president of the International Olympic Committee, Jacques Rogge, was completely bemused.

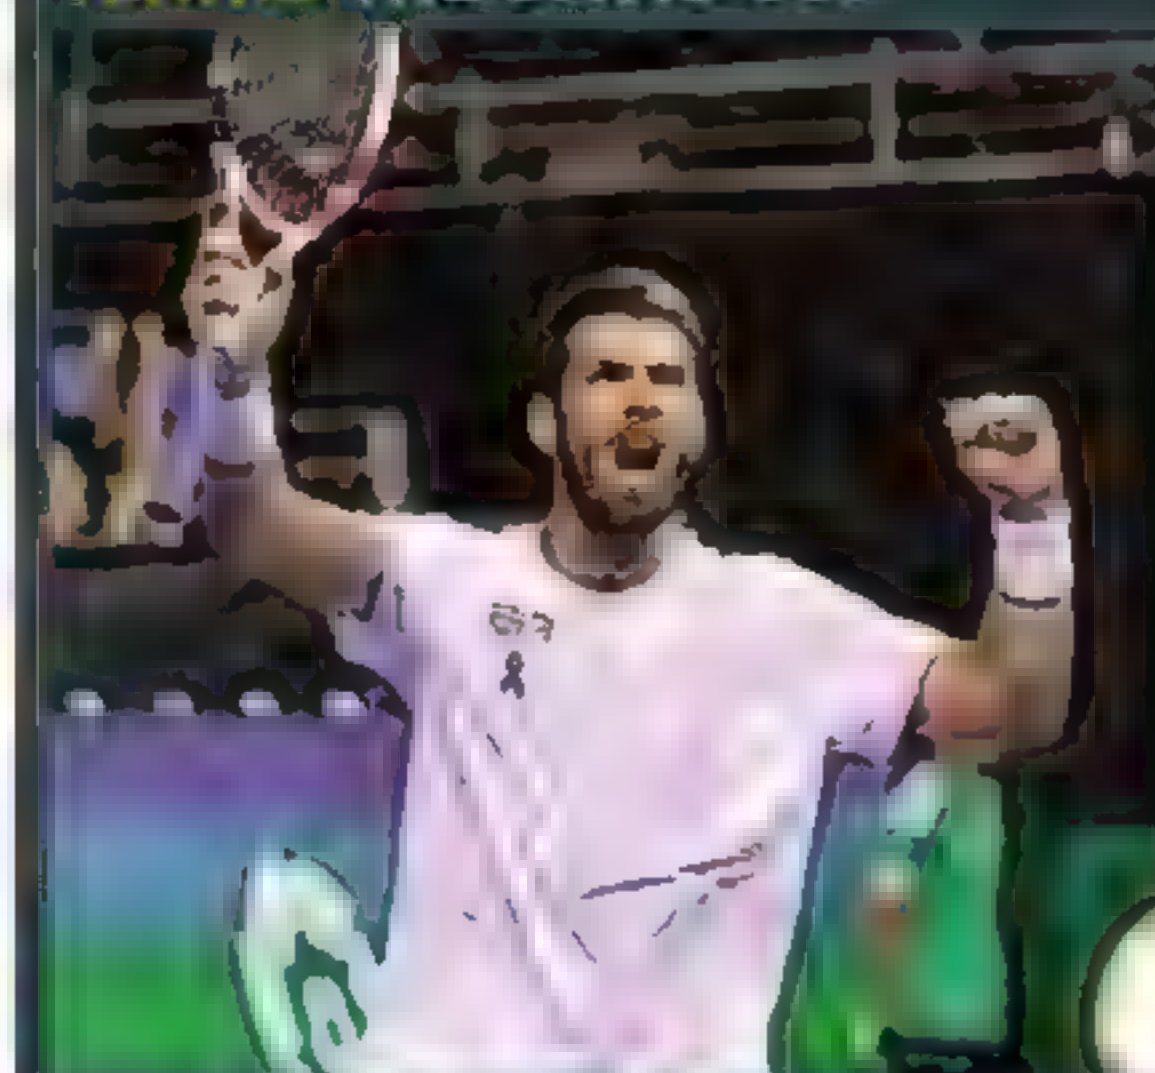

"I mean, he couldn't quite understand how she had got from the helicopter and the parachute had landed, then, three minutes later, she was sitting next to him in the stadium. That took some explaining!"

ICONIC Farah and Bolt's poses were outdone by the Queen's 'parachute' leap.

TENNIS THE DAVIS CUP

CAM STORMS BACK TO THRILL GLASGOW FANS

BY DAVID MCCARTHY

CAMERON NORRIE launched a Davis Cup rescue mission for Great Britain with a dramatic win over Taylor Fritz in Glasgow last night.

The British No.1 – playing in front of his home crowd with his dad David looking on – thrilled the 5,000 crowd by coming back from a set down to win 2-6 7-6 7-5.

This was after Dan Evans had lost the opening rubber to Tommy Paul.

Norrie (above) was blown away 6-2 in the first set but battled back to take the second set to a tie-break and the Scot played out his skin to win it 7-2 and level the match.

The world No.8 grabbed the crucial break of serve in the ninth game of the third. Serving for the match, Fritz, ranked four places lower, broke him straight back – but Norrie was not to be denied.

He promptly broke the American to love, giving him the chance to serve for the match for a second time. This time he would not be denied and GB had tied the match.

He said: "I have to thank the fans for their support. They got me through the second set to a tie break and I played well in that.

"Then I got the break in the third but he came back and the atmosphere helped me get through in the end.

"It's just different from playing on tour. It's always special to be here. My dad is from Glasgow and he is in the crowd, so that was special."

British No.2 Evans (circle) lost the curtain-raiser to the USA's Tommy Paul – and insisted that court conditions at The Emirates Arena didn't help the home cause.

After coming out on the wrong side of 4-6 6-4 4-6 thriller to world No.29 Paul, Evans was adamant the pace of the court didn't help.

The 32-year-old said: "It was a good match but a very slow court. It took a lot to get used to the balls.

"I think we were the first people to hit on it. Then obviously you throw in all the match environment. It's always a bit slower when you're playing, as well, when it's an actual match.

"It is what it is. It's a hard, physical court to play on. But it's nothing to do with the court why I didn't win the match.

"I had my chances and came up short."

Brasher: We are all inclusive

BY ALEX SPINK

THE London Marathon will offer a non-binary gender option for the mass-participation race for the first time.

The ballot for next year's race in April opens on October 1 and marathon bosses are determined to make their event "truly inclusive".

The elite races will still operate under World Athletics rules and therefore not offer a non-binary gender option.

The three gender options - male, female and non-binary - will be offered to all participants registering for the mass participation run via other entry routes, including charity entries.

Race boss Hugh Brasher said: "This is a significant step forward for the TCS London Marathon as we continue our journey to make our event truly inclusive."

RUGBY LEAGUE

I carried on playing after Jack died. Rugby League has helped me escape trauma of my brother's tragic death

A LIFE CUT SO SHORT

Danny Kirmond, right, with late brother Jack

BY DAVE CRAVEN
Rugby League Correspondent
@DCravenRL

DEVASTATED York City Knights star Danny Kirmond has told how playing rugby league helped him "escape" the trauma of his younger brother's death.

The former England international kicks off his club's Championship play-offs campaign at Halifax on Sunday.

He bravely played on days after Jack Kirmond, 33, died following an assault outside Charlton Rovers ARLFC last month.

Former Wakefield captain Kirmond explained: "I felt like I was in a massive goldfish bowl.

Obviously, it was absolutely devastating to myself, all my family. Jack wasn't just my brother, he was my best mate, my best man at my wedding, literally at my house every other day, spending time with my little girl.

"And living in the village (Sharlston), everyone knows everybody, wants to know everyone's business and we obviously own the pub there so there was just no escape from it.

"I just wanted a bit of normality, and rugby league's always brought me that."

York promised Kirmond they would be "normal" with him and the 36-year-old said: "That's exactly how it went. They've been great. I wanted to play and the club did a minute's applause for my brother so I wanted to be involved. In a selfish way it was an escape from everything. We played Bradford on the Monday. It had only been a few days since we'd said bye to my brother.

"It was just refreshing. Don't get me wrong, people were really nice but at the same time still wanted to take my head off and run over the top of me.

"But it was a break from everyone - and this might come across wrong - saying, 'I'm sorry about your loss.' My brother would have wanted me to play.

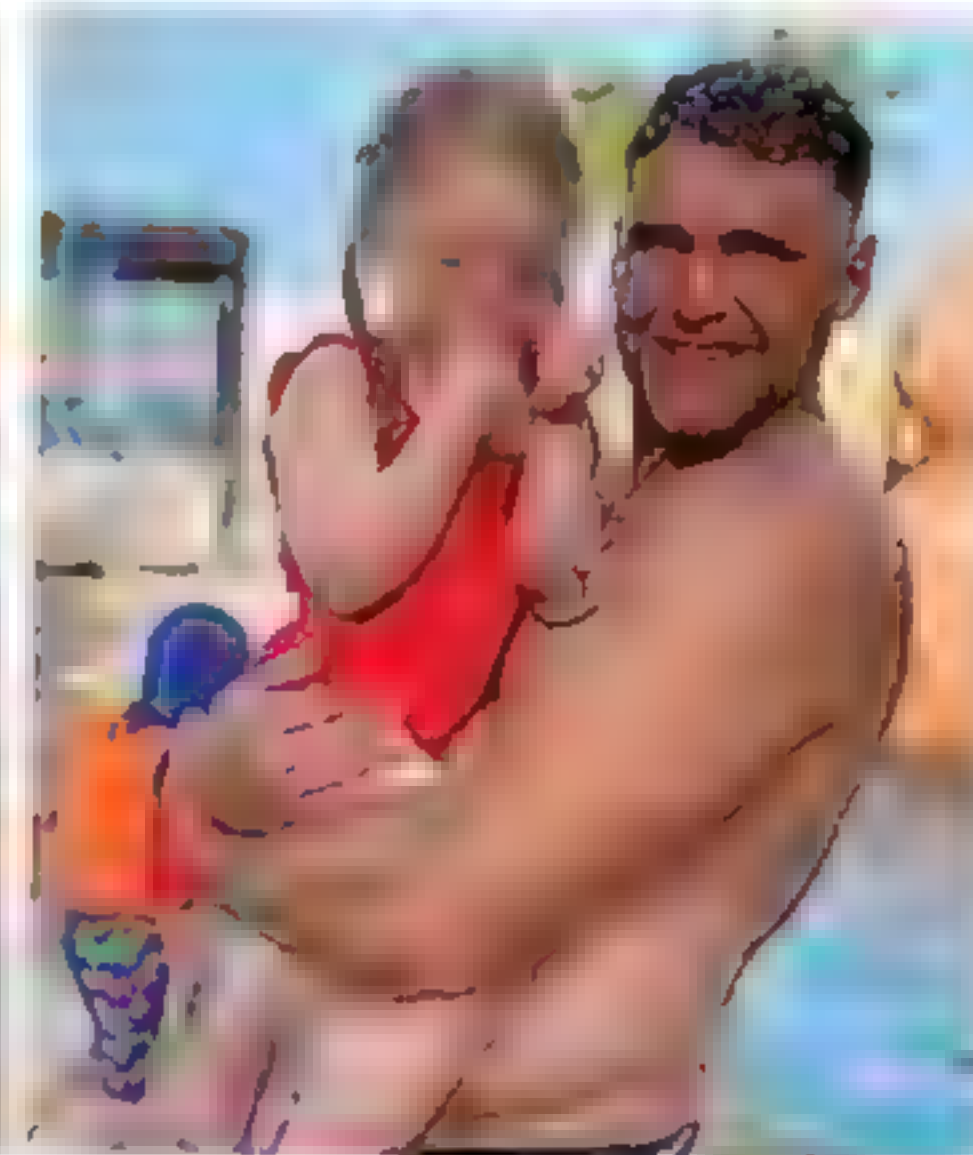

He loved watching me and loved playing himself.

"I'm a firm believer sport's really good for mental health. I did feel really bogged down and rugby's given me the chance to get away from that."

Kirmond admits it would be "brilliant" for York to cause an upset in the play-offs, and recent events have left the veteran second-row thinking he might play on next year.

Jack was an organ donor and his brother added: "For such a tragic and shocking thing to happen, it's really overwhelming.

"But what's given my mum a lot of comfort is Jack's heart, his kidneys, his liver have all gone on to someone else. He was just a really lovely guy. And I just miss him."

APPLEGARTH HOPES TRINITY CAN COMPEET WITH BIG BOYS

BY DAVE CRAVEN

WAKEFIELD'S new chief Mark Applegarth hopes to follow the success of Wigan's Matty Peet, as he becomes Super League's youngest head coach.

The 37-year-old has been promoted from assistant after Trinity boss Willie Poching and No.2 Francis Cummins were axed on Monday. Applegarth (left) has already served a range of club roles, including player performance manager, head of youth, and reserves coach.

His in-house progression is similar to Peet, who came through Wigan's coaching ranks before winning the Challenge Cup in his debut campaign as head coach.

Applegarth replaces him as Super League's youngest boss and said: "I've known Matty for a number of years. Everyone under Super League level knew he'd be a success.

"He's a good, honest bloke and knows Wigan inside out. I dropped him a message the other evening and he gave me some words of advice.

"It's pleasing to see him and a lot more young English coaches getting opportunities at this level.

"There's many different routes to this point. I've taken mine and I feel ready."

Wakefield-born Applegarth was initially "shocked" by this week's developments.

Trinity chairman John Minards said: "If you're good enough, you're old enough."

WALES AT THE WORLD CUP

FIRE BURNS IN OLD DRAGONS

Iconic Welsh veterans vow not to retire all at once to ensure Page can use their vast experience

BY JAMES NURSEY @JamesNursey

WALES' core of ageing veterans have "promised" boss Rob Page that they will not all quit together.

Skipper and record scorer Gareth Bale heads a group of key stars – Aaron Ramsey, Joe Allen, Wayne Hennessey and Chris Gunter – who are all in their 30s.

After moving to MLS side Los Angeles, Bale said that he aims to play for Wales at Euro 2024.

But several team-mates have been tipped to retire following the World Cup, which may be a last hurrah for some after Wales qualified for the first time in 64 years.

contract this week, admits it would be devastating to his plans and the "culture" of the national team if the veterans all bowed out together after Qatar.

Page (below) said: "We want Gareth to stay involved as long as he can.

"All the guys are aware of the culture, so I don't think there is going to be a mass of six or seven leave. They respect the culture so much, they don't want it to have a severe impact.

"Hearing Gareth say he wants to stay on beyond the World Cup is great, especially for the younger players.

"He can have an influence on them at every camp. You can't go from the players having a big influence to a big chunk of them leaving. To keep that culture going we need as many senior players that have had that influence from 2016.

"It might not be the case with some of them, but they think that much of what we have done here, they have promised they will not all leave together.

"I have thought of players I will want to keep with me because they are key to that environment and drive that culture."

Bale is unlikely to feature against Belgium in Brussels next Thursday in the Nations League as his MLS side will be taking on Houston on Monday.

He will fly back and land at Heathrow on Tuesday prior to Poland's visit on September 25. Bale has made only one start and eight sub appearances in America, but Page is pleased to see the star happy again after he was frozen out at Real Madrid.

Page added: "He shouldn't have to take some of the stuff he puts up with.

"I'm pleased for him and his family that he is in a good place mentally and at a club that show him love.

"If he plays 10 minutes for them, it is more than he was playing before. Whatever minutes he plays, I know when he comes on camp, even if he doesn't play, that he will be ready for us. But we might have to leave it for the Poland game.

"We want him in top condition, we don't want him fatigued going into games and running the risk of injury."

LEE SURPRISED AT TOON NOW... BUT FEELS THE ONLY WAY IS UP

EXCLUSIVE BY IAN MURTAGH

NEWCASTLE legend Rob Lee did not expect to see his former club in the bottom half of the table in mid-September.

Eddie Howe (right) and his side go into Saturday's home game against his old club Bournemouth with just seven goals from their opening six games, having failed to win since the opening day of the campaign. But Lee (below) is convinced they will be flying high very soon.

He has been so impressed with Newcastle, he thinks his pre-season prediction of a top 10 finish was over cautious.

Lee spent a decade at St James' Park in teams which finished runners-up twice, reached two FA Cup Finals and regularly qualified for Europe. And he is convinced the good times are back. He said:

"Anyone who's watched them knows they're playing well. "They went toe-to-toe with Manchester City and could have won.

Then they travelled to Liverpool and were unlucky to lose with the last kick of the game." Lee, back in the North East to play in a golf tournament to raise funds for the Michael Carrick Foundation, said: "There's a real feelgood factor about the place. The atmosphere on matchdays is incredible, a bit like it was under Kevin Keegan.

"I felt they were capable of breaking into the top 10. But they could be looking at an even higher finish"

TEENAGER HAS LUKE OF A STAR

BY HECTOR NUNNS

FULHAM starlet Luke Harris can expect to be unleashed on the Premier League any day following his shock call-up for Wales.

The 17-year-old has been selected for the first time by Wales boss Rob Page for the Nations League clashes against Belgium and Poland.

Harris (above) has not played a minute of league football for Marco Silva's side, but the Portuguese boss is close to throwing him into the fray.

Silva, who takes Fulham to Nottingham Forest tomorrow night, said: "The Wales call-up was great news for Luke and his family - and also for us as well because we have believed in him."

"He has a great career ahead of him - and he will have his time in the first team because he has the quality."

over Arsenal when he scored twice to underline a return to form which looked certain to get him an England recall.

Southgate is set to name his last squad ahead of the World Cup today and time is running out for those looking to nail down places for Qatar.

Southgate will take medical advice before unveiling his 26 man-plus squad and Rashford may yet be asked to report up especially with so many other players pulling out with injury.

Reds boss Erik ten Hag (left) said Rashford had a muscle injury, adding: "It's not really bad. We expect him quite soon to be back in the team."

But that could still mean a chance for the uncapped Toney, who has impressed the England scouting staff with his recent displays, which included a hat-trick against Leeds, and is also an expert at penalties.

PREM FANS ASKED TO APPLAUD QUEEN

BY JOHN CROSS

FOOTBALL fans will be invited to pay tribute to the Queen at every Premier League ground this weekend.

Supporters will be asked to observe a minute's silence before every game, which will be followed by the National Anthem, 'God Save The King'.

Big screens and perimeter boards will display tribute images, and flags at grounds will be flying at half-mast.

When the clock goes past 70 minutes, fans will also be invited to applaud the Queen's 70-year reign.

The Premier League says it will be a chance to "honour her extraordinary life and contribution to the nation and the world".

Seven Prem games will go ahead, but Man United v Leeds, Chelsea v Liverpool and Brighton v Palace are off due to a lack of police resources.

LIVERPOOL THE FIGHTBACK BEGINS

SEE NAPLES AND... CRY

Van Dijk reveals the pain the squad felt by Napoli humbling and pundits' reaction

BY DAVID MADDOCK
@MaddockMirror

VIRGIL VAN DIJK has revealed the deep hurt Liverpool players felt after their humiliation in Naples but told Kop fans: Things will get better.

Jurgen Klopp's men were crushed 4-1 in Italy last week before bouncing back with a 2-1 defeat of Dutch giants Ajax at Anfield on Tuesday.

The criticism they took in the wake of the woeful Naples surrender was wounding and Van Dijk believes the snipers went too far.

"What we did last week was unacceptable and in the days after that game we had a reality check," he said. "The last week has been tough for everyone but remember we are human beings. These moments can happen in football - it is how you react to them that counts."

The Dutch defender, speaking after the win over Ajax earned by a late winner from Joel Matip, questioned ex-players who put the boot in on Liverpool. And he argued that he would never do the same as a pundit.

"Ex-pros who have played at this level know there are times when you can have a blip," he said. "They have been in our situation yet are acting like you can't have a bad period, a difficult game."

"They are doing their job, that is what they do, but I don't think I would ever go down that route."

Van Dijk did concede that Liverpool embarrassed themselves in Italy. Napoli could easily have won that opening Champions League fixture by five or six goals.

"We were absolutely shocking that night," he said. "We know it, it hurts all of us, it hurts me."

And he revealed the home truths that have been exchanged in the dressing room after a bitterly disappointing start to the season, with Liverpool winning only three of eight competitive fixtures so far this term.

"The manager has spoken about it very loudly," he said.

"As players we are responsible for the performances on the pitch. We are the ones who have to do it. The reason behind the success is we perform as a team. We believe in our structure and we believe in ourselves."

"If people start blaming each other personally then it's a different story. But we don't do that."

Van Dijk has been one of several Liverpool players to come in for personal stick, with some critics claiming he's been a shadow of the colossus who has been the Premier League's best defender for three years.

And the former Southampton star conceded he has been way below his best form. "I can do much better,"

he said. "I know for a fact I can do better but we all can do better. I feel very hurt if we concede goals and don't keep clean sheets. I feel that responsibility but that's a good thing."

"I want to turn this season around not for myself but for all associated with the club."

With Sunday's scheduled trip to Chelsea postponed, Liverpool's next Premier League match is at home to Brighton on October 1. The Seagulls somehow carved a 2-2 draw at Anfield last term despite going 2-0 down inside 25 minutes.

Three days later Liverpool entertain Rangers in the Champions League before a trip to Arsenal.

EDING FOR THE TOP AFTER MAKING HIS MARC AGAINST SPURS

BY DARREN LEWIS

SOME Tottenham fans are still ruing the loss of talented playmaker Marcus Edwards.

Travelling supporters were left dumbstruck in the 2-0 defeat to Sporting Lisbon on Tuesday as the 23-year-old, allowed to leave Spurs on a free transfer six years ago, came back to haunt them.

Edwards, whose attempt at a wonder goal went viral and left

Spurs players in a heap in his wake, has come of age after backing himself.

He has scored three goals and provided three assists so far this season. Had he scored in the Champions League on Tuesday, it would have been one of the tournament's best-ever goals.

Sporting keeper Antonio Adan said: "He has come into a group that is good for him. A young group, with people who are helping him to be part of it more, to get him involved with us."

"He is really doing his part too and he's happy now. He also has the faith and trust of the manager (Ruben Amorim) to try those things and he's enjoying it."

Edwards came through Spurs' academy before leaving as a 17-year-old in 2016. He had loan spells at Norwich and Dutch club Excelsior before heading to Portugal in September 2019, first with Vitoria Guimaraes and, since January, at Sporting.

Of his performance against Spurs, Adan added: "If that run had been done by some other player, we would be talking about it for a very long time. It was fantastic - we're lucky to have a player like Marcus."

STAR MAN Edwards tormented his old club

WBA 2 Birmingham 3
THREE-GOAL Scott Hogan set this Midlands derby alight. Birmingham had not won at The Hawthorns for 17 years but Hogan (right) struck after 14 minutes, again nine minutes into the second half and completed his hat-trick on 71 minutes. He now has five goals in nine games – and stunned West Brom, who had fought back with a Jed Wallace equaliser in the 23rd minute. Hogan's first goal from Juninho Bacuna's through-ball was excellent reward for early pressure. Troy Deeney and Bacuna again combined to set Hogan free for his second. His third was from a lightning break. A late penalty by Albion's Brandon Thomas-Asante made for a nervy finale but the visitors held on.

Reading 0 Sunderland 3
PATRICK ROBERTS struck twice in three minutes to give Tony Mowbray his first away win in charge of Sunderland. Two classy finishes by Roberts (right) and a second-half goal by Jack Clarke ended Reading's four-game home winning streak. Sunderland lost striker Ellis Simms to injury on 37 minutes but moments after coming on as his replacement Elliot Embleton set up Roberts to fire home. And two minutes later he delightfully found the net again following another Embleton run and a superb Dan Neil dummy. Reading struggled to respond and were undone again on the break as Neil crossed for Clarke to convert in the 69th minute.

Millwall 0 QPR 2
TWO moments of precision from Chris Willock and Stefan Johansen gave QPR a deserved London derby victory at The Den. A frenetic start had settled into a midfield struggle before the visitors struck twice in 17 second-half minutes. Picking up a pass from Ilias Chair, Willock (above) spun and fired a pinpoint low strike into the bottom corner. Johansen then capitalised on slack defending to make it 2-0, cutting inside following a corner and skimming a low shot past Bartosz Bialkowski. Millwall central-defender Jake Cooper might have reduced the arrears, but dragged his low shot wide. The hosts went even closer when, after sub George Honeyman had a shot blocked, Zian Flemming crashed his shot against the bar.

Luton 2 Coventry 2
GUSTAVO HAMER'S worldie grabbed a point for struggling Sky Blues – as Luton's home hoodoo continues. On four minutes, Carlton Morris (right) fired the Hatters ahead, slamming home Fred Onyedina's knockdown. Coventry striker Viktor Gyokeres then headed tamely at Ethan Horvath. But the Swede made no mistake with his next effort on goal, firing in an 11th-minute low shot. Morris' left-footed finish from Harry Cornick's pass, however, restored the hosts' lead just four minutes later. But Mark Robins' team looked a different side after the break and Hamer's 25-yard screamer levelled it in the 61st minute, denying Luton their first home win this term.

Rotherham 3 Bl'pool 0
ROTHERHAM continued their impressive start with a rampant win over Blackpool. The Millers have swapped divisions in each of the last six seasons, but will hope this is the year they finally deliver stability. This win, courtesy of goals from Chiedozie Ogbene, Wes Harding and Georgie Kelly, puts Paul Warne's side up to ninth and within a point of the play-offs, with a game in hand. Irish winger Ogbene (right) got his fourth league goal of the season in the 34th minute with a looping header. Rotherham were then in full control and, after Ben Wiles clattered a post, defender Harding made it 2-0 when he slotted in on 82 minutes. Three minutes later, sub Kelly sealed the win with a sweeping finish.

Pukki finishes in style to put Norwich on their way to a sixth successive league win.

PUKKI CANES THE ROBINS!

Win makes it six of the best for Canaries thanks to Teemu

Norwich 3 Bristol City 2
BY JON WEST
TEEMU PUKKI scored twice as Norwich made it six wins out of six – but second-placed Canaries were left hanging on by a controversial Bristol City reply.

Pukki capitalised on two defensive clangers to put his side in control. But Tommy Conway's reply set up a second half that saw Josh Sargent put Norwich 3-1 up, before substitute Antoine Semenyo netted a goal Norwich fans insisted should never have stood. Dean Smith's men almost gifted the Robins a goal before a minute was on the clock when Sam Byram inexplicably passed to Conway, who fired wide across goal from just inside the box. Nigel Pearson's side had cause to regret that when Kal Naismith made a hash of dealing with Kenny McLean's free-kick in the 11th minute. Pukki seized on the bouncing ball and lifted it above advancing keeper Dan Bentley before nodding deftly into the empty net.

Naismith, the free transfer summer signing from Luton, was at fault for Pukki's second in the 23rd minute. The centre-back saw McLean intercept his pass and Aaron Ramsey sent Pukki through for a shot that deflected past Bentley off Zak Vynner. The visitors pulled one back in the 44th minute when Conway (inset) headed home Nahki Wells' cross from the left. It had been coming too, as Norwich had been overrun in midfield for a while. Wells sent a header at Norwich keeper Tim Krul early in the second half but. And although the Robins remained the side most likely to score, they were caught out from a corner in the 65th minute. Sub Gabriel Sara's delivery from the left was met by Sargent, who had got across Vynner, for a bullet header that was too hot for Bentley to stop. Pearson saw his side back in it with 13 minutes remaining thanks to Semenyo's strike – but Norwich were furious referee David Webb allowed it to stand. Aarons went down on the right of the Canaries box when Wells whacked him on the head with an arm but Marcelino Nunez was guilty of letting Joe Williams rob him in the box and Semenyo lashed home the loose ball. Norwich sub Danel Sinani passed up a glorious chance to wrap up victory but Bentley denied him in a one on one. Milwaukee Brewers owner Mark Attanasio has become a Norwich director, paying £10million for an 18 percent shareholding.

TERRIERS ARE SINGING OUT FOR WAGNER

BY DAVID ANDERSON
HUDDERSFIELD are searching for a new head coach after sacking Danny Schofield, who was in charge for just nine games. The Terriers axed Schofield following Tuesday's 2-1 home defeat by Wigan, which left the club with four points and deep in the relegation zone. Fans would love to see the return of out-of-work David Wagner (above). The German, who led Huddersfield into the Premier League in 2017, was guest of honour at last month's 2-2 draw against West Brom. A permanent appointment is expected to be made during the international break. Assistant coaches Narcis Pelach and Paul Harsley will take temporary charge for Saturday's home game against Cardiff at the John Smith's Stadium. Schofield lasted just 68 days as Carlos Corberan's successor.

CHRIS IS STILL WILD ABOUT BORO SYSTEM

BY IAN MURTAGH
UNDER-FIRE Chris Wilder has hit back at accusations he is imposing the wrong system on his Middlesbrough side. The promotion favourites were booed during the 3-2 home defeat against Cardiff on Tuesday and have won just two out of nine games so far. And Wilder's critics claim the overlapping centre-backs system which proved so successful at his former club Sheffield United is not working at the Riverside. Boro boss Wilder (above) said: "I understand that yet again it will get scrutinised. "People will say, 'Go back to a four', or 'Go back to this or that'. But when players make individual mistakes, that's not a problem with the system. "The system we started with worked alright when we played against Watford, it worked against Sheffield United and it worked when we beat Swansea and Sunderland."

PITCH IMPERFECT Hammers boss David Moyes is concerned

IRONS FEAR OF INJURY ON PLASTIC

DAVID MOYES admits Silkeborg's plastic pitch has given him a selection headache ahead of West Ham's Europa Conference League clash tonight

Silkeborg, fourth in the Danish SuperLiga, play on an artificial surface at their 10,000-seater stadium.

Moyes (top) has included defenders Craig Dawson and Aaron Cresswell in his squad after spells out injured, but he may not risk them.

"It's given me some thoughts," said the Irons boss.

"We respect that it's an artificial pitch, we'll have a look at Craig and Aaron and check out what's best for them with the surface. It's something we have to work with and do the best we can."

Fellow defender Ben Johnson is still out, but midfielder Tomas Soucek and winger Maxwell Cornet are in contention.

Thilo Kehrer, 25, is expected to feature again after overcoming a tricky start to his West Ham career.

"I feel like it's been a kick-start directly into my West Ham career and the best way to integrate," said Kehrer (above). "I didn't have so many games in pre-season, so having my debut right away helped me.

"It's important to have the belief from the manager. I had no games and rhythm from pre-season, so it's been getting into it from a cold start and I'm trying to pay that confidence in me back."

West Ham are top of Group B after winning their first match 3-1 against Romanian side FCSB.

HAA-HAA... YOU CAN'T STOP HIM!

Erling has last laugh with stunning goal

CHAMPIONS LEAGUE GROUP G ETIHAD STADIUM

BY ANDY DUNN
Chief Sports Writer
@andydunnmirror

FOR well over 80 minutes, he had powered down blind alleys, miscontrolled simple balls, misplaced routine passes.

And then, after a John Stones bolt from the blue had cancelled out a beauty from Jude Bellingham, he struck.

He struck with a finish that was half kung fu kick, half brilliant volley. It was familiar but it was thrilling. And in that one moment – the moment when he took to the air to connect with Joao Cancelo's sumptuous pass – there was yet another stunning reminder of what Erling Haaland is all about.

This was an identikit Haaland winner, an identikit Haaland goal that gave City a win that looked beyond them for long periods of this game.

And certainly looked beyond them when Jack Grealish and others were struggling.

Never mind the medal, never mind the summer days on the sauce, the fact remains that Grealish's career under Pep Guardiola has not developed with any eye-catching significance.

And maybe Grealish will continue to tread water if he continues to operate predominantly down the left flank because Premier League and Champions League defenders are reading his movements quite easily.

On three occasions in a tire-some first half, Grealish cut inside his first opponent only to find his second had anticipated the move and was able to comfortably block the shot.

Grealish should be getting more out of himself and Guardiola (below) should be getting more out of Grealish.

To be fair to the England man, he was far from alone in being uninspiring in a dismal advert for the Champions League group system.

The one first-half shot on target was from Dortmund's Salih Ozcan and that was no more than a chip into Eder-son's gloves. Dortmund were brilliantly organised but there was no disguising a lack of City urgency.

Of course, this lengthy qualification phase can produce its moments, can churn out the occasional thrill, but too many games can...actually, just leave it at too many games. That is the problem, right there.

At least the contest did spring into life in the second half, particularly after Bellingham had given Dortmund a deserved lead just before the hour mark. It was a lovely piece of opportunism, Bellingham darting in front of Manuel Akanji to connect with a Marco Reus cross after City had failed to clear a corner.

The goal immediately prompted three City changes and, unsurprisingly, Grealish was one of those to make way.

Equally unsurprising was that City looked way more threatening without him and that Haaland – now having the ingenuity of Bernardo Silva and Phil Foden to feed off – became more of a factor.

In Mats Hummels and Niklas Sule, though, Haaland was up against a defensive pairing especially motivated to thwart their old colleague.

Unfortunately for Hummels and Sule, they had not thought about the prospect of Stones hammering home a stunning strike, Vincent Kompany-like, from range to level matters.

But you can bet they HAD thought about the prospect of Haaland producing a moment of goalscoring, match-winning brilliance. And, to Guardiola's delight, that is exactly what happened.

Warning Bell as youngster gets payback

BY DAVID McDONNELL
@DiscoMirror

THE last time Jude Bellingham played at the Etihad Stadium, he left feeling cheated.

This time, he left the pitch with no sense of recrimination or injustice.

Back in April 2021, in the Champions League quarter-finals, Bellingham scored a perfectly good goal for Borussia Dortmund, only to have it chalked off for a foul on Ederson.

Replays showed Bellingham was robbed, with City going on to win 2-1 and ultimately sealing their place in the semi-finals.

Last night it took 15 minutes to make his mark, spraying a fine pass to Raphael Guerreiro, even though the attack was thwarted.

And he showed his defensive qualities too, blocking a goal-bound effort from Jack Grealish.

His awareness of space, quality of passing in tight situations, reading of the game and ability to draw fouls were impressive.

And it was fitting Bellingham (above) put Dortmund ahead with a superbly-dispatched header in the 56th minute.

Still only 19, Bellingham is already an established member of Gareth Southgate's England squad and is in contention to start at the World Cup.

This mature and commanding performance only served to underline his talent – and why Bellingham is so coveted by Europe's top clubs and so important to England's future.

PARK LIFE LET-DOWN FOR FANS

GROUP G: COPENHAGEN 0 SEVILLA 0

FC COPENHAGEN held Sevilla to a scoreless draw in a game that showcased plenty of effort – but little in the way of effective attacking football.

In a packed Parken Stadium, the Spanish visitors enjoyed much of the possession but struggled to get shots on target.

The best effort of the second half came from the Danish side's Mohamed Daramy with a dribble along Sevilla's goal-line, but keeper Marko Dmitrovic (above) snuffed out the chance.

Both sides have now picked up their first points, with Sevilla bottom on goal difference.

DE GEA TO EUROPA FOR BEST

BY DAVID ANDERSON

DAVID DE GEA admits Manchester United would rather play in the Champions League – but he's still desperate to win the Europa.

United keeper De Gea (top) has a long and checkered history with the Europa League, which he won as a 19-year-old with Atletico Madrid in 2010.

The Spaniard was on the bench when United beat Ajax in the 2017 final before he missed the decisive spot-kick in the 2021 shoot-out defeat by Villarreal.

Although he thinks a club of United's stature should be in the Champions League, he refuses to turn his nose up at the chance of European silverware. And he says tonight's clash with Moldovan champions Sheriff is must-win after United's home defeat by Real Sociedad last week.

"I think it's a great competition," said De Gea. "We should be playing in the Champions League but this is the competition we have to play for and we will give it everything. I have good memories of this competition and we have another big game against Sheriff."

"We lost our first one in the group and we have to win this game against a very difficult team. But, for sure, it's a very special competition."

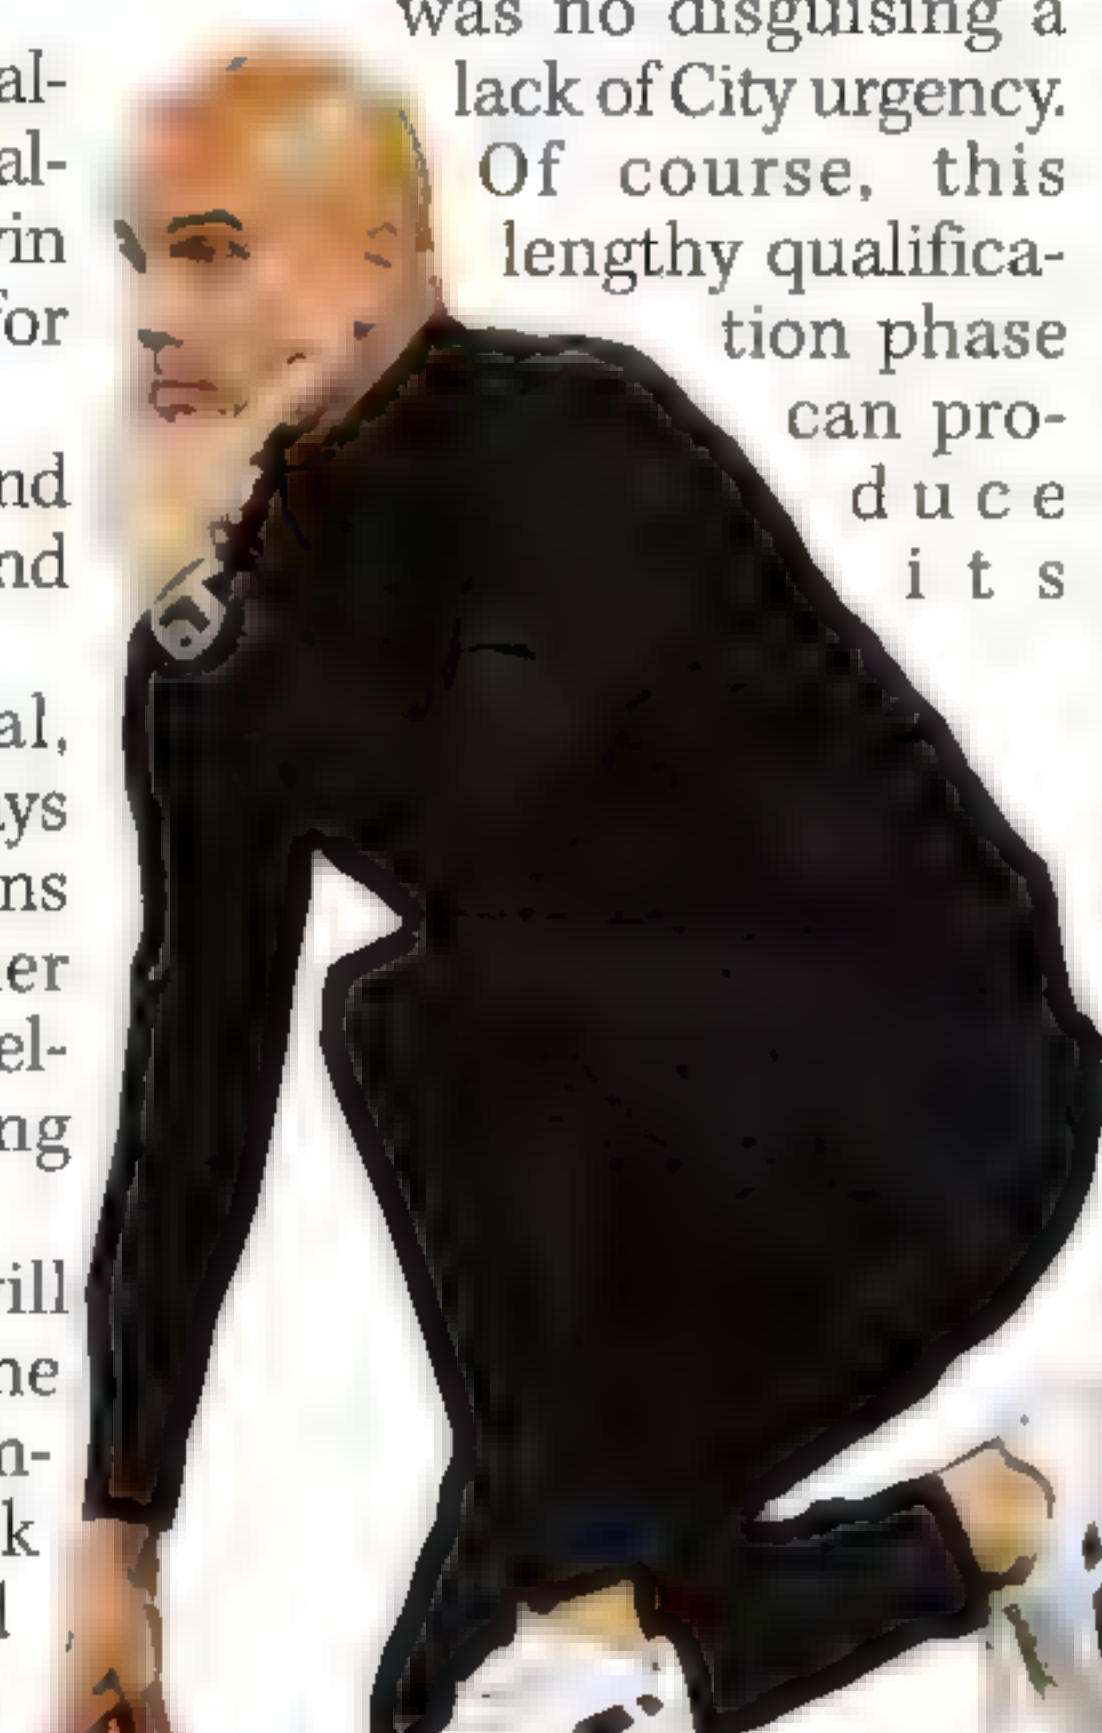

Erik ten Hag also admits nothing less than three points will do for United in the Zimbru Stadium as they bid to kick-start their group campaign.

"It's the same for every game, we have to win," said the United boss.

"It's clear that when you lose the first game, you have to win the second game, so we know what our task is."

Cristiano Ronaldo is expected to lead United's attack against Sheriff in Chisinau tonight because both Marcus Rashford and Anthony Martial are injured.

PFA TAKES SHINE OFF ALL-STARS

BY MARK JONES

THE PFA have poured cold water on Chelsea owner Todd Boehly's idea for a Premier League All-Star game.

Boehly (above) suggested on Tuesday that players from all clubs could come together to play in two regional sides, as they do in several US sports, with the money potentially going to help clubs further down the pyramid.

But a PFA spokesman said: "Football can't just keep forcing more and more into an already crowded schedule."

"Ideas shouldn't be dismissed because they might be concepts we're not familiar with, but we can't just keep adding fixtures without a proper and wide-reaching review of the calendar."

KID CHRIS IN RECORD AT JUST 13

NORTHERN IRISH schoolboy Christopher Atherton has become the youngest senior footballer in the United Kingdom - aged just 13.

The youngster (above) broke a record which had stood for 42 years when, aged 13 years and 329 days, he went on as a second-half substitute for Glenavon.

Amazingly, Atherton's first touch was an assist when he set up his side's sixth goal as they beat Dollingstown 6-0 in the BetMcLean League Cup on Tuesday night.

The striker is almost exactly a year younger than the previous youngest professional British player, Eamon Collins, who made his Blackpool aged 14 years and 323 days in 1980.

EIDEVALL'S VISION FOR WSL BOOM

ARSENAL head coach Jonas Eidevall is confident the new Women's Super League season can live up to expectations and deliver on the pitch.

Arsenal's home game against Brighton at Meadow Park will kick-off the season tomorrow night and, following England's success in the Euros this summer, there is more interest than ever in the WSL.

Eidevall (above) feels the fans will not be disappointed and continued interest could lead to more games being played at larger venues.

"I'm sure the players will respond. The sporting product is of high quality," the Arsenal boss said.

"We just need to make sure we find stadiums that allow all attendances so all the people who want to come to the game have access to it."

No dream start for new boss as Chelsea look in trouble in Group E after throwing away the lead

Chief Football Writer
@johncrossmirror

It was a cruel introduction to life in the Champions League.

No dream start for Graham Potter as Chelsea contrived to throw away a lead and are now in serious peril in Group E with back-to-back games against AC Milan ahead.

Potter, 47, admitted he had never even been to a Champions League game before, let alone take charge of one, but for long periods looked perfectly at home in his new surroundings.

Raheem Sterling scored the first goal of the new Potter era and, if Todd Boehly was watching after punting his idea for a US-style All-Star North v South game, then the Chelsea forward would surely be guaranteed a place. But the Blues let it slip with the familiar failings of 'Potterball' because they dominated, played some pretty stuff - and yet did not put their opponents away.

Instead, Chelsea were held to a draw amid missed chances and defensive errors at Stamford Bridge, and Potter clearly does not have a magic wand.

At the final whistle, there was a smattering of boos, which can only be out of sheer frustration on what should have been a big night, but ultimately it fell rather flat.

The minute's silence before kick-off was impeccably observed. Chelsea fans did their own rendition of 'God Save The Queen' and there was a huge banner which read 'RIP Your Majesty' displayed in the Shed End. It was a mark of respect matched by Potter's smart suit and black tie, and it felt like an emotionally-charged occasion at the Bridge.

Chelsea rose to it and the new manager would have been very happy to see his players zip the ball around with the sort of speed and ideas that have been missing in recent weeks.

There was no great fanfare to introduce Potter to the crowd and maybe that was down to the circumstances of the past week and the period of mourning.

But it was pretty obvious this was now Potter's team as they lived up to his promise to deliver exciting football with Reece James pushing forward, it was more like a back three with the wide players just bombing forward.

James was the supply line as his crosses just eluded Pierre-Emerick Aubameyang's head and then another low ball into the box was beyond Sterling at the back post.

When Chelsea did make their breakthrough it came after great work by James in the build-up forward, Mason Mount's cross then carried all the way across the face of Salzburg's penalty box.

There was Sterling on the far side, he rolled the ball forward to control it, picked his spot and then curled a lovely, low shot into the far corner to bring Stamford Bridge to life (celebrating with Aubameyang, left).

Incredibly, that made it 250 goals and assists combined for Sterling in all competitions at club level for Liverpool, Manchester City and Chelsea. He will clearly be a vital player for Potter.

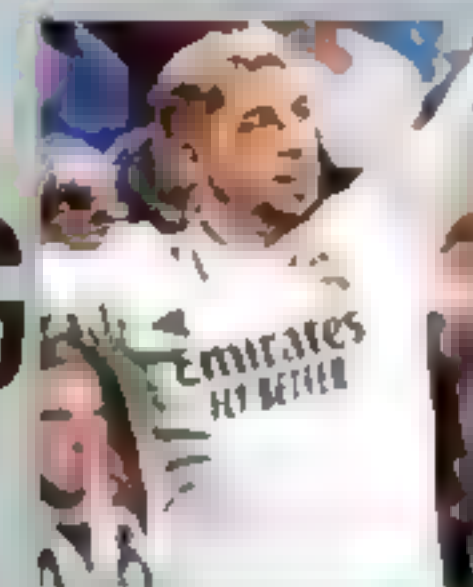

But Potter's constant failing at Brighton was not putting opponents away. And sure enough, back came Salzburg as they benefitted from two sloppy pieces of defending.

Sub Junior Adamu escaped from Thiago Silva, in came the cross and there was Noah Okafor, pulling away from Cesar Azpilicueta to put his shot past Kepa Arrizabalaga.

Hardly a memorable introduction for Potter and things can only get better from here.

MADRID STARTING TO PURR

CHAMPIONS LEAGUE ROUND-UP

CARLO ANCELOTTI'S Real Madrid were made to wait for their 2-0 win against Red Bull Leipzig in the Bernabeu in Group F.

Uruguayan Federico Valverde (top) struck in the 80th minute and Marco Asensio made sure in time added on for the reigning European champions.

Having eased past Celtic in their match day one game, they now sit top of their group, two points clear of Shakhtar Donetsk.

The Spaniards have won all five of their fixtures in La Liga to top that table too in a fast start to the season.

In Group H, Juventus suffered a 2-1 defeat at home to Benfica which leaves them without a point after two games.

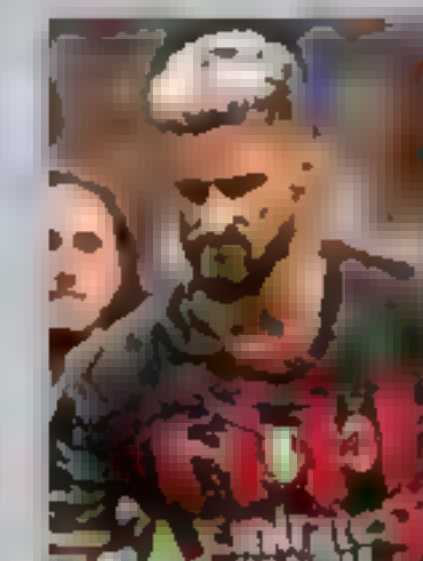

Arkadiusz Milik gave the Italians a fourth minute lead but Jao Mario cancelled that out from the penalty spot two minutes before the break.

Neres Campos then put them ahead on 55 minutes and it proved the winner.

Also in Group H, Israel's Maccabi Haifa took a 24th minute lead through Tjaronn Chery against Paris Saint-Germain.

But Lionel Messi restored order on 37 minutes, followed by Kylian Mbappe on 69 and Neymar on 88 to calm concerns and ensure a comfortable 3-1 win.

GIROUD IS SPOT-ON FOR MILAN

GROUP E AC MILAN 3 ZAGREB 1

OLIVIER GIROUD helped AC Milan earn their first Champions League win in Group E.

The former Arsenal striker (top) opened the scoring from the spot in the first half against the Croats with Alexis Saelemaekers and Tommaso Pobega completing a comfortable win after the interval. Mislav Orsic was on target for Zagreb who beat Chelsea on match day one.

"It wasn't an easy match. We wanted to win playing our football and, with a bit more accuracy, we could have scored more goals," said Frenchman Giroud.

BHOYS GET STUCK IN THE MUD

CHAMPIONS LEAGUE GROUP F SHAKHTAR DONETSK 1 CELTIC 1

CELTIC are still searching for their first Champions League win this term after a frustrating night in Poland.

Reo Hatate's sprint beyond the Shakhtar Donetsk defence led to the Hoops taking an early lead, but Mykhaylo Mudryk (above) equalised against the run of play on 29 minutes.

Celtic reasserted their superiority after the break, but sub Giorgos Giakoumakis missed the best opening for the Bhoys, who lost to Real Madrid in their Champions League opener.

Hoops boss Ange Postecoglou (right) said: "More significant than the point was the performance, which was excellent."

"The result was not reflective of that, but they gave everything and that's all I can ask for."

Ukrainians Shakhtar, who have been displaced from their stadium since 2014, attracted a crowd close to 30,000 at Legia Warsaw's home. There was no minute's silence for the Queen, but the players wore black armbands.

Sead Haksabanovic fed Hatate and the midfielder's shot took a deflection off Artem Bondarenko and went in to hand Celtic a 10th-minute lead.

But Shakhtar levelled when winger Mudryk was given a clear run to score.

GERS FACE FINE OVER ANTHEM

CHAMPIONS LEAGUE GROUP A RANGERS 0 NAPOLI 3

RANGERS defied UEFA's blanket ban on British teams playing the national anthem last night.

The Scottish side aired 'God Save the King' through the PA system at Ibrox prior to their defeat to Napoli.

UEFA chiefs rejected requests from British clubs to play the national anthem before European matches following the Queen's death.

And although Manchester City and Chelsea followed protocol in their European home games, the Gers, who are renowned for their affinity towards the Royal Family, ignored the instructions, which is likely to lead to a fine.

On the pitch, the game turned on Rangers' Jamie Sands conceding a spot-kick in the 55th minute for fouling Giovanni Simeone and being sent off (top).

Keeper Allan McGregor brilliantly saved the penalty from Piotr Zielinski, before the rebound was tucked away. But VAR saw encroachment and the spot-kick had to be retaken - with McGregor thwarting Zielinski again.

A third penalty from Matteo Politano (above) finally beat him, with Giacomo Raspadori and Tanguy Ndombele scoring late on for Napoli.

MAN CITY 2 DORTMUND 1

BY DAVID McDONNELL

ERLING HAALAND was Manchester City's match-winner again as his late stunner sank his former club Borussia Dortmund.

Haaland's strike made it 13 goals in eight games as Pep Guardiola's side came from behind to stay top of Group G.

England star Jude Bellingham put Dortmund ahead, with City heading for a first home loss in the Champions League for 20 games.

But a thunderous finish from John Stones put City level before Haaland sealed the win with his acrobatic late volley.

CHELSEA 1 SALZBURG 1

BY JOHN CROSS

GRAHAM POTTER suffered frustration after his first game in charge as the new Chelsea boss.

The Blues threw away a lead and left themselves bottom of Group E - and in trouble with back-to-back games against AC Milan up next.

Raheem Sterling scored the first goal of the Potter era and Chelsea looked set for a much-needed win.

But Red Bull Salzburg punished them for missed chances and errors as Noah Okafor (above) got a late leveller.

Potter (left) clapped the fans at the final whistle, but some were booing at the end.

horoscopes

Aries

March 21-April 20

After some turmoil early on, the situation will become suddenly calm. It will be as if everyone will agree arguing is a waste of time. Something special will be found while clearing out a drawer or cupboard. Launching a home improvement project will be a great use of your energy.

Taurus

April 21-May 21

A note of caution tells you it would be wise to be sensitive to what your friends and family are expecting and needing from you. Recent activities have helped to put you in a more forward-looking frame of mind and you are feeling as if you are at last ready to go after a personal goal.

Gemini

May 22-June 21

Taking a business risk will annoy a senior colleague. If you want to push yourself to try new things you may have to do so outside working hours. You find it hard to hide your irritation at a workmate's difficulty grasping simple things. Be ready to repeat instructions more than once.

For more call 0905 789 4173 (80p/min + network access charge)

Cancer

June 22-July 23

A workmate or housemate is making jokes in an effort to ease the tension that is building up around you. Rather than get annoyed by their indifference, try looking behind their words and you will see the actions they are taking are aimed at resolving a difficult situation.

Leo

July 24-August 23

Give some thought to a family matter when you know housemates are waiting for your views and opinions. If someone is hoping for your support with something that means a lot to them it would be cruel to leave them waiting. With your help, people can make positive changes.

For more call 0905 789 4175 (80p/min + network access charge)

Virgo

Aug 24-Sept 23

A calm and sensible conversation about your differences with someone will lead to a compromise. Differing views will not provide too much of a stumbling block to progress. In fact it will be through pooling ideas that you will find the best ways to move forward.

For more call 0905 789 4176 (80p/min + network access charge)

Libra

Sept 24-Oct 23

No one in the family can fault your good tastes and that's why housemates will be happy to leave it to you to pick a new colour scheme for your home. Painting a drab room and re-upholstering shabby furniture will be a good use of your resources. Your creativity helps save you money.

For more call 0905 789 4177 (80p/min + network access charge)

Scorpio

Oct 24-Nov 22

Take advantage of the spirit of cooperation around you by approaching others for help, advice or favours. You have been trying to build courage to ask them. Have a go even if it means approaching someone about something they turned down. You might get a different reply now.

For more call 0905 789 4178 (80p/min + network access charge)

Sagittarius

Nov 23-Dec 21

Much to your astonishment a kind relative or workmate will take over some of your chores. This will save you from mounds of work you were expecting to do. Be certain to thank someone for kindnesses they have performed on your behalf. Let them know you really appreciate it.

For more call 0905 789 4179 (80p/min + network access charge)

Capricorn

Dec 22-Jan 20

Conversations with a workmate or neighbour will touch on subjects you have in common. You might hear of new developments in your area that you will be keen to follow up. It may be possible, after some discussion, that you will launch a creative project together.

For more call 0905 789 4180 (80p/min + network access charge)

Aquarius

Jan 21-Feb 19

You will charm someone into agreeing to plans they previously objected to. Later, when they have had a chance to think about it, they will realise they have agreed to something you have been wanting for ages. They might even wonder why they did not support you earlier.

For more call 0905 789 4181 (80p/min + network access charge)

Pisces

Feb 20-Mar 20

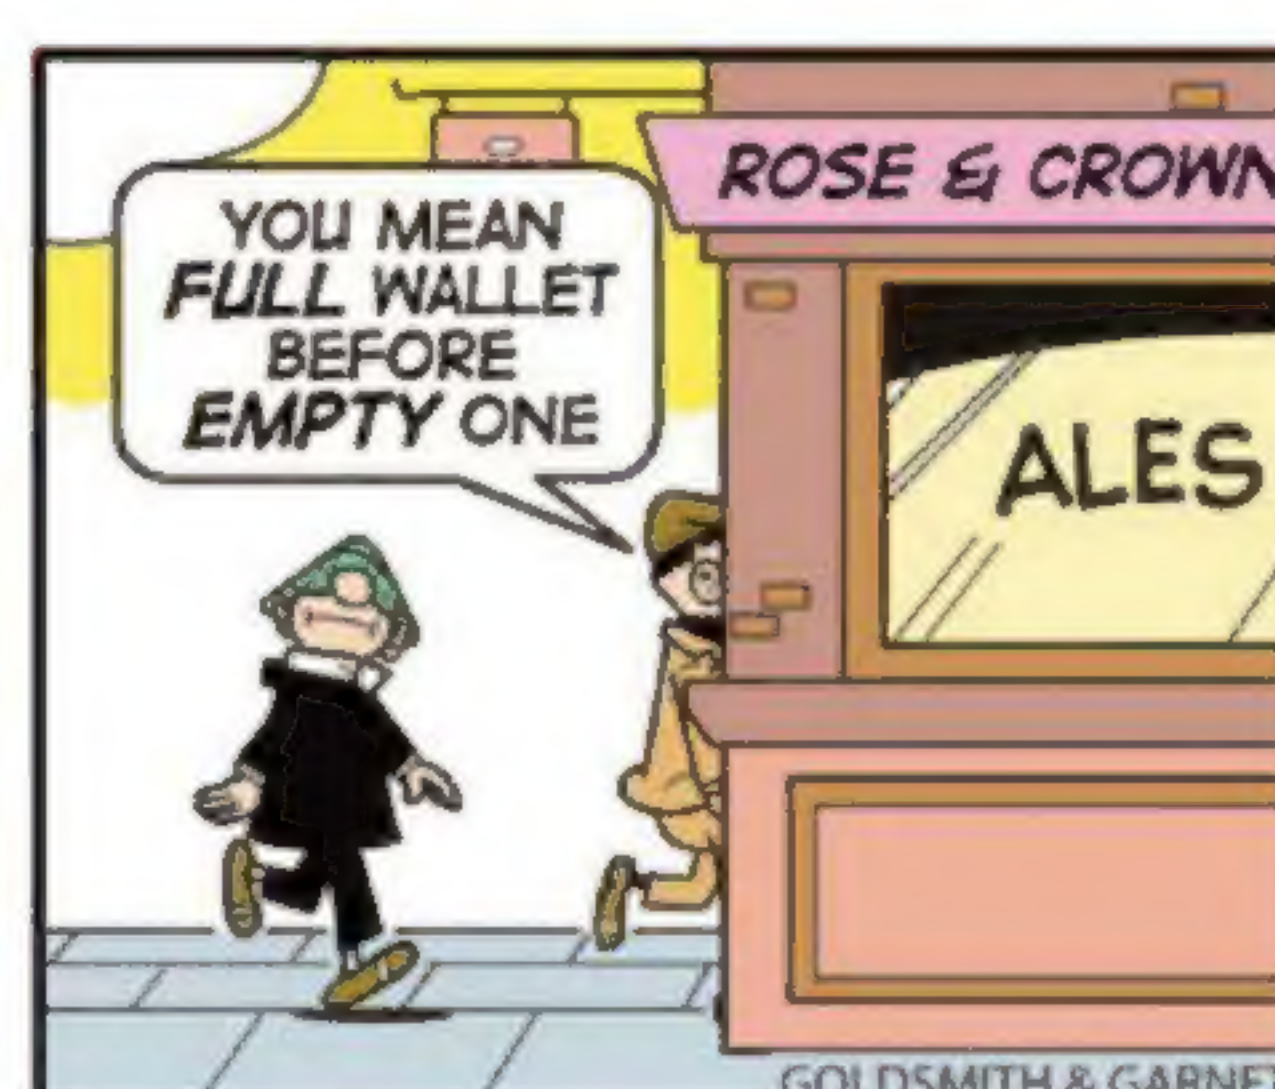

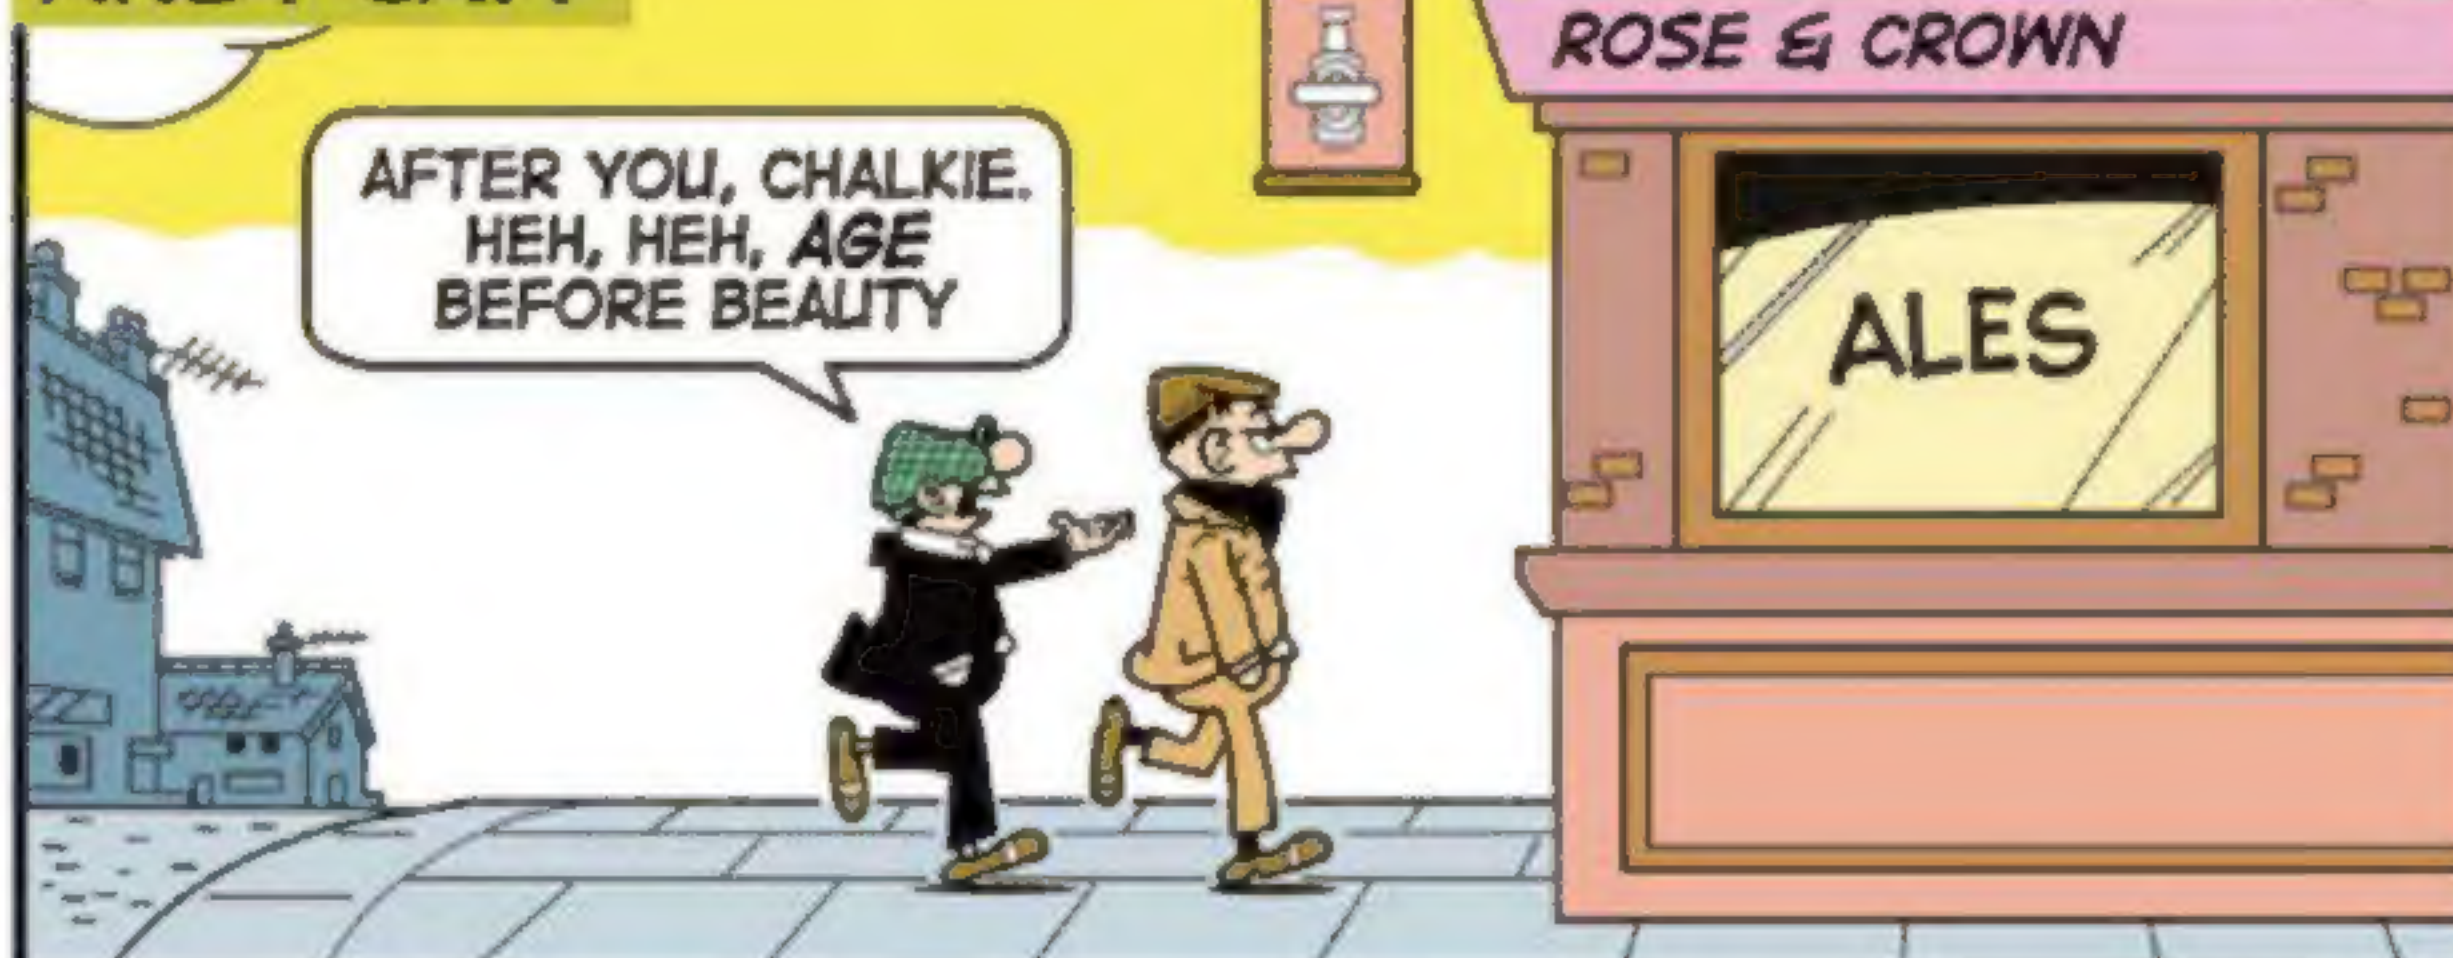

A youngster in the family may ask for help with homework or some research they have got to do. You might actually enjoy getting stuck into this project when it happens to be a favourite subject of yours. An unusual and unexpected educational opportunity could come your way.

For more call 0905 789 4182 (80p/min + network access charge)

Calls cost 80p per minute plus your telephone company's network access charge - maximum of 5 minutes duration. You must be over 18 and have the bill payer's permission. Service provider Spoke. Helpline 0333 202 3390

Muffins! BBC Good Food daily recipe to collect

Chocolate chip muffins

Make these easy chocolate chip muffins with kids over the weekend or school holidays. They take just 15 minutes prep and are a guaranteed family favourite

250g self-raising flour
1 tsp bicarbonate of soda
150g chocolate chips, milk, white, dark or a mix of all three 100g golden caster sugar
2 eggs, lightly beaten
150ml natural yogurt
100g unsalted butter, melted

1 Heat oven to 200C/180C fan/gas 6 and line a 12-hole muffin tin with paper cases. Sift the flour and bicarbonate of soda into a large bowl, then stir in the chocolate chips and sugar. Add the beaten eggs, yogurt and butter, and stir to combine. It doesn't matter if the mixture looks a bit lumpy, it's more important not to overmix or the muffins will turn out tough.

2 Fill the paper cases and bake for 20-25 mins until risen and golden brown. Transfer to a rack to cool - or eat slightly warm. Will keep for three days in an airtight container.
